COMMUNIST CENTRAL COMMITTEE TAKES OVER HIS POWERS

MEMORIAL GROUP DECIDES TO HOLD U. S. TO PLEDGE ON RIVERFRONT

Votes to Continue Effort for Federal Monument Here to National Expansion—Urges Cooperation.

The Jefferson National Expansion Memorial Association will continue its efforts to get the Federal Government to keep its pledge to construct a great national memorial on the St. Louis riverfront, the association's executive committee decided yesterday.

Those who attended the meeting and voted unanimously to hold the Government to its compact with the City were Postmaster Bernard F. Dickmann, Aloys P. Kaufmann, George C. Smith, William W. Crowder, Gale F. Johnston, Donald V. Fraser, Charles E. Caspari Jr., Luther Ely Smith Jr. and John Raeburn Green.

History of Project.
In a review of the history of the project, the committee pointed out that in 1939 the city voted $7,500,000 in 1939 to be used for the memorial on the basis of $3 of federal funds for each $1 of city funds. The sum of $2,500,000, in city bond funds was deposited with the United States Treasury for acquisition of the land, making a total of $9,000,000 available, with $2,500,000 of city bonds unissued and still available to match further federal funds in the same 3-to-1 ratio, the committee said.

The Seventy-third Congress created the United States Territorial Expansion Memorial Commission to formulate plans for the construction on the site of old St. Louis of a permanent memorial to the men who made possible the territorial expansion of the United States, particularly President Thomas Jefferson and his aids, Livingston and Monroe, who negotiated the Louisiana Purchase, the committee said.

Unfair to St. Louis.
Stressing the fact that in the intervening years Congress voted for other projects of much less historical importance than the Jefferson Memorial, the committee charged that St. Louis has not received fair treatment at the hands of the Government.

"The riverfront was never the property of the city," the committee said. "The United States Government acquired it from private owners by condemnation for the sole purpose of developing a national shrine to honor and forever memorialize the courage and vision of those who made possible the territorial expansion of our nation."

The co-operation of all citizens is sought by the association in urging the Federal Government, in partnership with the City of St. Louis, to go ahead with the original purpose for which the project was founded.

Soviet Embassy in Washington Has Air of Gloom, Quiet Staff

MICHAEL SMIRNOVSKY, first secretary of the Russian Embassy in Washington, struggles to retain his composure while talking to newspaper men.

Whispers From Adjoining Room Heard When Reporter Asks About Stalin's Condition.

By GEORGE H. HALL, A Washington Correspondent of the Post-Dispatch.

WASHINGTON, March 4.—The Russian Embassy staff, to all outward appearances today, was taking the news of Prime Minister Stalin's illness in stride, although there was an air of gloom about the big former Pullman mansion on Sixteenth street a few steps from the fashionable Statler Hotel.

A reporter who called at the embassy was told by Michael Smirnovsky, first secretary, that there was no immediate comment. Later a copy of the official government statement issued in Moscow was handed out. The embassy said it might have something further to say later today.

The embassy is a Victorian building erected in 1910 by Mrs. George M. Pullman, widow of the sleeping-car magnate. For several years before the Russian revolution of 1917 it served as the embassy of the Czarist government. It was then taken over by the Kerenky government but was vacant from 1922 until 1934, when this country recognized the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics.

TRUMAN SAYS HE IS SORRY ABOUT STALIN'S ILLNESS

KANSAS CITY, Mo., March 4 (INS)—Former President Truman said today he is sorry to learn of the serious illness of Soviet Premier Joseph Stalin.

Truman told reporters: "Of course, I am sorry to hear of his trouble. I am never happy over anybody's physical breakdown. My association with Stalin at Potsdam was very pleasant."

Asked for his opinion on what effect Stalin's death would have on world affairs, Truman replied: "I am in no position to assess any such effect since I have not been in touch with the foreign situation since Jan. 20." (That is the date Truman retired from the White House.)

POPE PRAYS FOR STALIN CONVERSION, AND FOR RUSSIA

VATICAN CITY, March 4 (AP)—Pope Pius XII retired to his private chapel and prayed for conversion of Prime Minister Stalin as soon as he learned of the Soviet leader's illness, a Vatican source said today.

This source said the Pontiff prayed, too, for a better future for the oppressed Russian people.

"It is only possible to wish in these last moments," the Vatican source declared, "that he (Stalin) will repent of the enormous evil he has done. History has not known before him a persecutor of so little faith and morality and so lacking in all virtues that we connect with civilization."

"Stalin has impersonated the anti-Christ and under his direction Communism has struck at the Church from all sides and organized atrocious offenses against Christian people and, even worse, has indirectly sent millions on the road to wrong and perdition. From these acts, only God, in His infinite pity, is able to absolve him."

NEW YORK, March 4 (AP)—Television networks and stations covering this year's Easter parade April 5 expect, through careful planning, to prevent the circus atmosphere that marked last year's event.

Television last year lured publicity seekers to the Fifth avenue parade in greater numbers than ever before. Many either forced themselves or were invited in front of cameras, where they plugged commercial projects.

VAN FLEET SAYS U.N. CAN WIN IN KOREA WITHOUT SPREADING WAR

Tells House Committee He Thinks Military Victory Is Only Way to Break a Deadlock in Truce Talks.

WASHINGTON, March 4 (AP)—Gen. James A. Van Fleet declared today the United Nations forces can win a military victory in Korea without enlarging that war into a greater conflict.

He said he knows of no other way to break a deadlock over the prisoners-of-war issue—the great snag of armistice talks.

With the four-star general in the witness chair of the House Armed Services Committee, Representative Patterson (Rep., Conn.) asked: "Is there any solution to the problem of interchange of prisoners?"

Van Fleet replied in one word: "Victory."

Patterson: "Other than that, there's nothing else?"

Van Fleet: "That's all."

Later, Van Fleet endorsed by inference one of the pronouncements by Gen. Douglas MacArthur, who was fired by former President Truman as Far Eastern commander.

Representative Cunningham (Rep., Iowa) asked: "There is no substitute for victory in Korea?"

Van Fleet: "Not in my opinion."

Testifies in Public Session.
Van Fleet, who is home for retirement, testified for an hour and a half at a public session of the House committee. The committee was in a closed session with him to hear more details which could not be brought out in public for security reasons.

Van Fleet proposed that the draft term be lengthened from its present two years "to 30 or 36 months," because American troops in Korea are "running short" of trained replacements.

He said the longer draft term would allow more time for training without cutting down on the time available for actual military service.

In declaring a military victory could be won without enlarging the war, he said that was his "personal opinion," but that he would have to withhold his reasons for that view until the closed meeting.

No Serious Supply Shortage.

During a general discussion of the situation in Korea, Van Fleet said there is no serious supply shortage but that replacement of men is not satisfactory either in numbers or quality of troops.

Van Fleet praised the "very good teamwork" among top American commanders in Korea and said he "couldn't ask for finer support" than he received from the Air Force and the Navy.

A representative Shafer (Rep., Michigan) asked whether "this is a remote control war" in which field commanders are "not allowed to make quick decisions" but must work through Washington.

The general's reply: "My job was to carry out orders, not to formulate them."

Van Fleet called the present war situation of stabilized lines a "situation of our own choice." He said it is "not a checkmate, not even a stalemate."

Representative Vinson (Dem., Georgia) asked the former Korean commander "if an offensive is launched, wouldn't that be broadening the war?"

"Not necessarily," replied the general. "That's my opinion. It would not."

Hearing Room Crowded.
Spectators crowded into the big hearing room in the House Office Building. Many were standing.

Van Fleet asserted at the outset that he would not publicly discuss military planning in Korea. "I can't, of course, talk about plans as a matter of policy—not my policy but yours," he said.

He was referring to a statement by Chairman Short (Rep., Missouri) that the general was under restraint in his testimony but should use his own judgment about saying nothing "to give comfort to the enemy."

Van Fleet repeated a belief he had expressed in Korea when he was retiring from his command—that the United Nations could have won a military victory in the spring of 1951.

He said that after a Communist offensive was beaten back the U.N. forces had crippled the Reds so seriously they could have driven on to victory if the U.N. Command had not ordered a halt after the Communists suggested truce talks.

"They were hurt badly," Van Fleet said. "In my opinion that's why they asked us to talk things over at the conference table."

GEORGI MALENKOV IS REPUTED TOP CONTENDER FOR PREMIER'S POST

Nearest Rival Reported to Be Lavrenti Beria, Secret Police Boss—Molotov Also Is Said to Be in Running.

By RAYMOND P. BRANDT, Chief Washington Correspondent of the Post-Dispatch.

WASHINGTON, March 4.—Soviet Russian history foreshadows murderous internal turmoil over the successor to Prime Minister Stalin and great uncertainty over Kremlin foreign policy throughout the world.

With Stalin incapacitated by a stroke, the leading contender for the premiership of Russia and head of the Communist party is said to be round-faced Georgi Malenkov, Deputy Premier and Stalin's private secretary for many years before he became one of the top men of the party's inner council. He has been described as a "walking card index" of party members and policies.

His nearest rival is reputed to be bald, bespectacled Lavrenti Beria, head of the dreaded secret police, once an ally of Malenkov. Recently he has been criticized in the party-controlled press—an ominous sign in Russia.

Molotov's Possibility.
A third man to be considered is Vyacheslav M. Molotov, former Foreign Minister and also a Deputy Premier, a close associate of Stalin's from the beginning of the Russian revolution in 1917.

All three men are on the 25-member Presidium of the Central Committee of the Communist party, set up recently after the Politburo was abolished. The fight for supremacy and survival will probably take place at this top party level rather than in government. It is inconceivable that it would be by popular election although the voters undoubtedly will be permitted to approve the Central Committee's final choice.

A successor proves himself there will be unrest in Russia and its satellites and uncertainty throughout the world if Soviet history follows the line of Stalin's rise to power after the death of Nikolai Lenin in January 1924. Stalin and Leon Trotsky fought a life and death battle, with Stalin the winner and Trotsky first exiled and finally murdered in Mexico. Stalin later "liquidated" nearly all his old enemies who helped him on the upward climb.

Struggle With Trotsky.
How Stalin's incapacity to function will affect the peace of the world must be a subject of sheer speculation because so little is known about Soviet internal affairs. The Stalin-Trotsky struggle lasted until 1927 when Trotsky and his supporters were exiled. Trotsky had favored greater and swifter socialization within Russia and fomentation of revolution abroad. During the fight Stalin opposed the Trotskyite program but after he became dictator he took over his rival's domestic policies. Around that time he announced that he would make Socialism succeed in Russia as a model for the rest of the world.

It is not known whether Stalin has arranged for his successor or the carrying out of his present foreign policies. As late as 1948, the favorite to succeed him was Andrei A. Zhdanov, who wanted to spread the spread of Soviet imperialism. The 52-year-old Zhdanov died under mysterious circumstances in 1948. Death was attributed both to heart disease and cancer but reports persisted he might have been poisoned.

Police Accused of Laxity.
These reports were given substance in January this year when Soviet newspapers published sensational stories that the favorite had indeed been poisoned, with the blame placed on nine Kremlin doctors for having falsely diagnosed the case. The government and party newspapers also charged that the secret police, who were supposed to be protecting Russian leaders, were lax and "infected with loafing."

Because Beria was head of the secret police, these news stories were interpreted to mean that he was out of favor with Stalin and marked for liquidation. The public criticism also gave rise to reports that Malenkov had outmaneuvered Beria and was now the man most likely to succeed Stalin.

No action apparently has been taken in the case of the nine doctors, but a Soviet medical publication, the Medical Worker, said today, according to a dispatch from Moscow, that they will be punished severely.

A close analogy to Soviet intra-party fights for personal power is the American gangster warfare, although the Russian terms are "purges" and "liquidations."

Stalin was the master purger.

PRESIDENT VOICES SYMPATHY OF U.S. IN STALIN ILLNESS

Expresses Hope God Will Watch Over Soviet Peoples Regardless of Who Rules.

WASHINGTON, March 4 (AP)—President Eisenhower expressed his sympathy to the Russian people today in commenting on the serious illness of Premier Stalin.

The President voiced hope in a statement that God will watch over the Soviet peoples "regardless of the identity of government personalities."

The text of the statement: "At this moment in history when multitudes of Russians are anxiously concerned because of the illness of the Soviet ruler the thoughts of America go out to all the people of the U.S.S.R.—the men and women, the boys and girls—in the villages, cities, farms and factories of their homeland."

"They are the children of the same God who is the father of all peoples everywhere. And like all peoples, Russia's millions share our longing for a friendly and peaceful world."

"Regardless of the identity of government personalities, the prayer of us Americans continues to be that the Almighty will watch over the people of that vast country and bring them, in His wisdom, opportunity to live their lives in a world where all men and women and children dwell in peace and comradeship."

James C. Hagerty, the White House press secretary, told reporters Eisenhower was informed of Stalin's illness about 6 a.m., as soon as he awakened.

The President went to his office a little before 7:30, somewhat earlier than usual, Hagerty said.

There he met with Allen Dulles, head of the Central Intelligence Agency, and discussed with him the international situation as it might be affected by Stalin's collapse.

Eisenhower kept in touch also with Secretary of State John Foster Dulles on the situation and conferred with him personally before entering a meeting of the National Security Council this morning.

Hagerty said he was unable to disclose whether the White House had sent any communication to the Russians either directly or through the Soviet embassy here.

Sober-Faced Crowds Gather at Newspaper Offices and Newsstands for Bulletins.

MOSCOW, March 4 (AP)—The news of Joseph Stalin's illness blanketed the Soviet capital with a pall of grief.

The announcement was made over the Moscow radio as many Muscovites were going to work. The announcers gave the news slowly, and the bulletin was read over and over again.

Crowds gathered in front of newspaper offices and newsstands. There was a look of concern on many faces. Pravda, official organ of the Communist party, headlined the news with black letters—"Government Communique." It was sub-headed: "Of the illness of the chairman of the Council of Ministers of the U.S.S.R. and secretary of the Central Committee of the Communist party, Comrade Joseph Vissarionovich Stalin."

At the office of Tass, the girl who handed out the agency's bulletins to foreign correspondents was red-eyed from weeping.

People surrounded the newspaper stands scattered throughout the city as the morning editions carrying the Government announcement and the medical bulletin were sold.

At points in the city where the earliest copies of Pravda were posted on walls, dozens of Russians gathered to read the details. They were a still and sober lot as they absorbed the news.

UNCERTAINTY OVER STALIN'S ILLNESS CUTS STOCK PRICES

NEW YORK, March 4 (AP)—Bonds of Soviet satellite countries and of the old Russian czarist regime were higher today against the background of Stalin's illness. But the stock market lost the gains it made in the last 10 days.

Losses of $1 or more were recorded on some issues. Experts attributed the drop to uncertainty due to Stalin's illness.

There was an immediate demand for such issues as Estonian 7 per cent bonds which were up around $30 at $150 and Polish 8 per cent bonds which added $10 at $90. These bonds have a face value of $1000 and have long been in default.

The Russian Czarist bonds were heavily traded on the American Stock Exchange where the 6½ per cent bonds of 1919 gained $1.20 at $35 and the 5½ per cent bonds of 1921 were up $3.75 at $35. These bonds are not recognized by the Russian Communists.

Artist Painting Mural Hardest Worker for Peace at the U.N.
The New York Herald Tribune-Post-Dispatch Special Dispatch.

UNITED NATIONS, N.Y., March 4.—The hardest working man at the United Nations these days is Jose Vela Zanetti, a Spaniard, who has been toiling for five months on a mural that is 60 feet long and 12 feet high in one of the main corridors.

He strokes himself with 20 cups of coffee a day while painting, and smokes a pound of strong pipe tobacco in the same period.

The theme of the mural is man's struggle for peace. It begins with the destruction of a family in modern war and ends with its resurrection. At center is a gigantic four-armed figure holding the U.N. emblem.

Vela Zanetti, a fugitive from the Spanish civil war and formerly director of the school of fine arts at Ciudad Trujillo, in the Dominican Republic, charges visitors five cents for the privilege of viewing his mural. As they depart, he hands back the nickels.

Vela Zanetti got to the U.N. by the way of a Guggenheim fellowship.

LIES UNCONSCIOUS IN KREMLIN AND ISN'T RESPONDING TO MEDICAL CARE

Soviet Announces Premier Was Stricken Sunday Night—Breathes With Difficulty, Pulse Irregular.

By HENRY SHAPIRO, MOSCOW, March 4 (UP)—

Prime Minister Joseph Stalin lay paralyzed and unconscious from a brain hemorrhage today, and the Council of Ministers and Communist party Central Committee took over his powers in the emergency.

A medical bulletin issued this morning and repeated without change throughout the day disclosed that the 73-year-old Stalin was not responding to treatment. Between readings of this bulletin, the station broadcast slow and somber music.

(There were indications that leaders of the Communist satellites have been called to Moscow. A Berlin dispatch said Walter Ulbricht, Communist boss of East Germany, flew to Moscow last night. The dispatch, quoting closely the associates of Ulbricht, said other leaders behind the Iron curtain were gathering in Moscow.)

(This added to speculation that Stalin might already be dead, but a press attaché at the Soviet Embassy in Washington said at 3:30 a.m. St. Louis time that the Soviet Prime Minister is still alive. The embassy said its latest report had been received about an hour earlier.)

The news of Stalin's illness came in two announcements. One was signed by the Central Committee of the Communist party of the Soviet Union and by the Council of Ministers of the U.S.S.R.; the other by Minister of Health A. F. Tretyakov and nine doctors.

The Government statement began by announcing "a great misfortune which has befallen our party and our people—the grave illness of Comrade J. V. Stalin."

It said Stalin was stricken in his apartment at the Kremlin "during the night of March 1-2," which was Sunday night.

It added that: "The treatment of Comrade Stalin is conducted under the constant supervision of the Central Committee of the Communist party of the Soviet Union and the Soviet Government."

The medical bulletin said Stalin suffered a "sudden brain hemorrhage affecting vital parts of the brain, as a result of which he developed a paralysis of the right leg and the right arm, with loss of consciousness and speech."

The medical bulletin said Stalin was having trouble breathing and that his pulse beat at 120 a minute was "completely irregular."

The bulletin advised that on March 2 and 3, necessary measures for treatment were undertaken, "directed toward improvement of disturbed functions of breathing, circulation and blood which so far have not brought any changes in the course of the illness."

Confidence in Unity Expressed.
The government statement expressed confidence that "our party and the whole Soviet people will in these difficult days display the greatest unity, cohesion, steadfastness and vigilance."

The government statement said the Central Committee of the party, the Council of Ministers and "our entire party, our whole Soviet people, realize the full significance of the fact that the grave illness of Comrade Stalin will involve his more or less prolonged non-participation in a leading activity."

The government said the Central Committee and the Council of Ministers "found it necessary to publish, beginning today, medical bulletins on the state of the health of Joseph Vissarionovich Stalin."

(Western correspondents in Moscow were unable, because of censorship, to indulge in any sort of speculation. Even the official announcement of Stalin's illness was held up in Moscow until it could be passed formally through censorship.)

(When Nikolai Lenin, his predecessor, died on Jan. 21, 1924, the Moscow censors telephoned the news to correspondents 14 hours later. Not for another four hours were the newsmen permitted to send it out of the country.)

Prayers in Moscow Churches.
The heads of all major Soviet churches called on their believers to pray for Stalin's recovery. Patriarch Alexei, head of the Russian Orthodox Church, arranged special services in Moscow's Yelozkovsky cathedral tonight. As a

REACTION OF WORLD'S LEADERS TO STALIN'S ILLNESS

SOME IN WEST SAY NEW SOVIET CHIEF MIGHT INCREASE DANGER OF WAR

Delay in Report on Premier Raises Possibility Russians Are Being Prepared for News of His Death.

By NATE POLOWETZKY

LONDON, March 4 (AP)—The grave illness of Joseph Stalin brought the world face to face today with the twin questions of who will succeed him and whether the chances for peace will become better or worse.

The Moscow announcement leaves little doubt that Stalin must be counted out of action. Since the disclosure was withheld for two days, the delay naturally raises the possibility that the Russian people are being prepared for news of the death of their 73-year-old dictator.

Only 12 days ago a high British source who cannot be identified said the greatest danger of a third world war stemmed from the possibility of a struggle for power inside the Kremlin in the event of Stalin's death. Similar views have come from other Western leaders. Some of them fear this a new leader, in order to consolidate his position, would seek to assert his strength by facing up sternly to all international challenges.

Churchill Offers 'Sympathy.' British Prime Minister Churchill, the only now active member of the powerful Allied "Big Three" of World War II, sent his private secretary to the Soviet Embassy to express his regrets at Stalin's illness and to "offer his sympathy."

Stalin, Churchill and the late President Franklin D. Roosevelt composed the triumvirate. The three met together twice during the war, at Yalta in Crimea and at Tehran, in Iran.

In Bonn, West German Chancellor Konrad Adenauer said that "if Stalin dies, the free world cannot relax but should continue to build up its strength against aggressive international Communism."

Adenauer said nobody could prophesy what effect Stalin's death would have on the world political situation, "but we must remember that the death of Lenin, there came a Stalin."

Tokyo Expects No Policy Change. In Tokyo, Japanese Foreign Office sources said they foresaw no change in Russia's foreign policy if Stalin dies. The sources, quoted by Kyodo news agency, said they believed Stalin's successor would be Vice Premier G. M. Malenkov. They predicted he would continue Russia's "peace" overtures in an effort to woo Japan from the West.

Pakistan Foreign Minister Zafarullah Khan said in Karachi he was "distressed to learn of the illness of Marshal Stalin" and wished him a speedy recovery.

The Red Korean radio at Pyongyang broke the news of Stalin's illness to North Koreans in a 6 p.m. broadcast (8 a.m., St. Louis time). The broadcast, monitored in Tokyo, carried the text of the Kremlin announcement without comment.

It is striking that the news of Stalin's illness and treatment comes barely two months after the Soviet Union's announcement of a purge of physicians. In January Moscow disclosed the arrest of nine physicians, some of them Jews described as having ties with Western espionage and Zionism. The announcement said they had incorrectly treated A. A. Zhdanov, one of the earlier heirs apparent to Stalin's mantle, and caused his death in 1948 at the age of 52. That announcement turned the heat onto the Soviet Ministry of Health and on security organs headed by L. P. Beria, chief of state security, and served notice that those in power were in a position to clean out adversaries. The belief at that time was that Deputy Premier Georgi M. Malenkov was riding high.

New Health Minister. The official announcement disclosed that the Soviet Union has a new Health Minister—A. F. Tretyakov. The previous Minister of Health was Y. I. Smirnov.

The doctors' plot was one of the things that prompted the comment recently by the high British source mentioned above. He said he was much more anxious about the Moscow situation than he was a year ago, observing that "as long as we knew Stalin was in full command, we could be fairly confident."

He based this on the belief Stalin was more or less content, within his lifetime, to keep the Russian area of control pretty much as it is. But in the event of an all-out struggle for the dictatorship, this informant said, "there is no telling what their rashness might plunge us into."

Adenauer, who made his statement to a group of visiting American editors, said: "I have had the feeling for some time that they were preparing the way for Stalin's succession in Moscow. I believe the persecution of the Jews in Russia and the satellite countries, and particularly the Moscow doctors case, is connected with these preparations."

"Now a new element has been injected which will cause political unrest throughout the world." In Belgrade, the semi-official Yugoslav press agency saw implications in the Moscow announcement that Stalin already is dead. Yugoslavs wonder how change in power would affect Moscow's fight with President Josip (Tito) Broz.

street and then turns to form an ell, the open part of which is protected by a high fence of stone and black iron. The outer door consists of a massive iron grill backed by plate glass. The brass lock has Russian letters stamped in the metal.

There was no sign of life outside the structure. A black limousine stood in the cold drizzle in the semi-circular driveway. Pedestrians passed by without a glance at the building.

The door was opened when the reporter rang the bell by a pale impassive young man of short stature who was wearing a gray business suit and who could be seen through the glass to rise from a desk in the foyer when he heard the bell.

Silent Reception. The reporter identified himself and asked to speak to someone in the embassy qualified to comment on the illness of the Premier. The young man's lips moved but he said nothing. He motioned the reporter to enter and conducted him down a red-carpeted hall into the main lobby.

At the entrance to the lobby two men sat on red plush chairs. One was wearing an overcoat. He had a gray felt hat on his knee and sat thoughtfully with chin in hand. The man sitting directly opposite him was wearing a dark suit. He rose, nodded in a friendly manner, and resumed his seat.

The reporter was ushered into a small room off the lobby, which was decorated with potted palms in the curve of the circular stairs, and motioned to a seat. The young man left, closing the curtain, French doors behind him.

The room was simply furnished and had the appearance of a pastor's study or the reception room of a mortuary. An oriental carpet was on the floor. The two green-upholstered chairs and small love seat were a little frayed. They were ranged about a small coffee table, on which was a glass ash tray and a fountain pen holder, but no pen. Perhaps 20 stacks of pamphlets were placed on other tables and on the handsome black marble fireplace mantel.

These pamphlets were generally descriptive and interpretive of the Soviet policies. Some were reprints of speeches made in the United Nations by Soviet Foreign Minister Andrei Y. Vishinsky.

After a few moments of waiting a tall blond young man opened the French doors and entered the room. He was well-tailored in a blue flannel suit. He clicked his heels faintly with military precision, bowed slightly from the waist and nodded his head. The reporter repeated his question.

"I will see the charge d'affaires," he said. He bowed again and departed, leaving the door open about two inches.

From time to time, whispered conversation could be heard outside the room. Several times a remote door slammed with such violence that the air current set the French doors to quivering.

After a while another young man entered and shook hands. The question was repeated and he explained that a communiqué was being prepared and would be delivered, when ready, to the National Press Club. He thought that would be around noon. Replying to a question, he said his name was "Smirnovsky, M."

Smirnovsky ushered the reporter into the lobby, where he youth, Stalin studied to be a Russian orthodox priest. Jewish, Moslem, Buddhist and Baptist leaders joined the orthodox patriarch in calling for prayers for Stalin.

Chief Rabbi Solomon Shiffer of the Moscow synagogue proclaimed a special prayer service for this evening. He asked all Jews in the capital to pray to the Almighty for restoration of Stalin's health.

Officials announced that all orthodox churches throughout the Soviet Union would hold special services, following the patriarch's lead.

The medical bulletin and the Government statement on Stalin's illness was broadcast repeatedly by Moscow radio on both home and foreign broadcasts. For foreign listeners it was broadcast in French, German and English.

The Premier's illness was published in a double-column display in all newspapers. However, there was no immediate comment.

Most members of the foreign diplomatic corps heard the news in mid-morning and made arrangements to pay sympathy calls.

The news was all the more stunning because recent foreign visitors to Stalin had reported him in perfect health and spirits. His last known interviews with foreign dignitaries was on Feb. 18 when he received Indian Ambassador K. P. S. Menon and Dr. Saifuddin Kichlew, chairman of the All-India Peace Committee and winner of a 1952 Stalin peace prize. Both told reporters that the Prime Minister appeared in good health.

Earlier in the month, on Feb. 8, Stalin received Argentine Ambassador Leopoldo Bravo. Bravo later emphasized his impression that the Prime Minister enjoyed good health.

Report of Earlier Stroke. (Stalin, however, is known to have suffered from heart trouble for some time. He also has been reported to have been slightly paralyzed on the left side by an earlier stroke.)

Only last week, foreign diplomats were discussing the possibility of a meeting between Stalin and President Eisenhower. Speculation was revived by Eisenhower's expression of willingness to meet Stalin half-way to discuss peace if he thought such a meeting would do any good.

It was recalled that Stalin had proposed such a meeting with President Truman several times in the last few years. About two years ago Stalin said he would like to visit the United States but his doctors would not permit long journeys, and therefore he proposed Moscow, Prague or Warsaw.

was met by the first young man and escorted to the door. As they passed the two seated figures the one who had at first arisen and nodded, did so again. The seated man in the black overcoat remained where he had been before, staring straight ahead and apparently lost in thought.

A reporter who visited the embassy during the night, after the first announcement of Stalin's illness, said the lights were burning brightly throughout the mansion and that the man who answered the ring of the bell had tears streaming down his cheeks.

LENIN PARTLY PARALYZED FOR MORE THAN A YEAR BEFORE DEATH IN 1924

LONDON, March 4 (UPI)—JOSEPH STALIN's predecessor, Nicolai Lenin, died in 1924. He suffered hardening of the brain arteries which, as in Stalin's case, paralyzed his right arm and leg and impaired his speech. His illness lasted two years.

Early in 1922, doctors told Lenin—founder and guiding spirit of Soviet Communism—that he had cerebral sclerosis. They ordered him to cease daily work.

In December of 1922 Lenin began to lose his power of speech and became paralyzed on his right side.

He died Jan. 21, 1924, at Gorky, near Moscow.

For any such meeting, Truman refused to travel outside the United States to meet him.

The official announcement of Stalin's illness said he was under the care of a group of doctors supervised by Tretyakov, minister of public health, and I. Kuperin, chief of the Medical Sanitary Board of the Kremlin.

The physicians were listed as: Professor-therapist P. E. Lukomsky of the Academy of Medical Science of the U.S.S.R.

Professor-neuropathologist V. Kononov.

Professor-therapist A. L. Myasnikov.

Professor-neuropathologist I. N. Filimonov.

Succeeded Lenin in 1924. Stalin has led the government since 1924, when Lenin died. He led the Soviet people to victory in World War II, and his illness comes only a few weeks after the tenth anniversary of the battle of Stalingrad, turning point of that war for the Soviet forces.

The paralytic stroke Stalin suffered evidently is similar to that which killed Franklin D. Roosevelt, his wartime ally. President Roosevelt, who met with Stalin at Tehran and Yalta in wartime conferences, died at 63 in 1945.

Stalin was 73 on his last birthday, December 21, 1952.

American Communist party today sent a message to Moscow, expressing the hope that Prime Minister Stalin soon will regain his health.

In a message to the central committee to the party, the national committee expressed "deepest grief" at Stalin's illness and called it "a tragedy to all democratic humanity."

The message was signed by William Z. Foster, Pettis Perry and Elizabeth Gurley Flynn. Foster, national chairman of the party, is under indictment on a charge of conspiracy to teach and advocate violent overthrow of the Government. Perry and Miss Flynn recently were convicted of conspiracy and each sentenced to three years in prison. They are free on bond.

CONGRESSMEN'S VIEWS ON OUTLOOK IF STALIN DIES

Senator Wiley Says 'History May Be Turning Corner'—Cites Rome When Caesar Fell.

WASHINGTON, March 4 (AP)—American lawmakers disagreed today on what the death of the gravely ill Premier Stalin might mean to the world, but Senator Wiley (Rep.), Wisconsin, said "history may be turning a corner."

Wiley, chairman of the Senate Foreign Relations Committee, added:

"The question is whether or not we shall see a repetition of Roman history when Caesar fell."

Years of anarchy and bloodshed in civil war followed the assassination of the Roman dictator Caesar.

Senator Carlson (Rep.), Kansas, voiced an often-heard thought by saying he hoped Stalin's successor will be "more amenable to world peace." He tempered this by adding that on the other hand, "developments might well bode ill for the world."

Word of Caution. Representative Short (Rep.), Missouri, chairman of the House Armed Services Committee, cautioned:

"A lot of things could happen but the hierarchy in the Kremlin is closely knit. I expect Malenkov would take over. I am afraid he would be more dangerous than Stalin. He is not as mature. If we have a break-up of the Russian government because of discord or unrest behind the Iron Curtain, forcing the leaders to make war to maintain their control at home."

Senator Monroney (Dem.), Oklahoma, offered this opinion:

"This may mean a re-shuffling and realigning of Russian policies with Russia off balance for quite a period. You can't pass clear title to dictators no matter how well the plans are laid."

Senator George (Dem.), Georgia, said that if Stalin dies there might be a break-up within the Kremlin that could mean greater hope for peace.

But Senator Sparkman (Dem.), Alabama, cautioned against "expecting too much" from the political world.

Representative Vorys (Rep.), Ohio, a top ranking member of the House Foreign Affairs Committee, said he would not expect much change in the Russian attitude if Stalin were replaced.

George is the senior Democrat on the Senate Foreign Relations Committee. Sparkman was his party's candidate for Vice President last year. Vorys is the author of a pending House resolution condemning Russia for disruption of World War II international agreements.

Show of Solidarity. As the Russian dictator lay seriously ill in Moscow, George predicted there would be an "early show of solidarity" behind his successor if Stalin dies.

"But this agreement, I believe, will be a temporary one," George said. "In view of the very great rivalries I do not believe it can hold very long."

"When these rivalries reach the breaking point there could be a division within the Kremlin that will make it possible for a change in world conditions that will be more conducive to peace."

U.S. Can't Afford to Let Up. Sparkman, who is also a member of the Senate Foreign Relations Committee, said:

"It looks like Stalin is out of the picture. I'm rather afraid we may be prone to expect too much. It is not safe for us to count on a disruption of things within the Politburo. They may have things

Text of Broadcast From Moscow Announcing Illness of Stalin

LONDON, March 4 (AP).—The text of the Moscow radio broadcast announcing the illness of Soviet Prime Minister Joseph Stalin and quoting the official Soviet news agency Tass follows:

GOVERNMENT statement about the illness of the Chairman of the U.S.S.R. Council of Ministers and Secretary of the Central Committee of the Communist party of the Soviet Union, Joseph Vissarionovich Stalin:

The Central Committee of the Communist party of the Soviet Union and the Council of Ministers of the U.S.S.R. announce the great misfortune which has befallen our party and our peoples—the grave illness of Comrade J. V. Stalin.

During the night of March 1, Comrade Stalin, while he was in Moscow in his apartment, had a hemorrhage in the brain which affected vital parts of the brain.

Comrade Stalin lost consciousness. A paralysis of the right arm and leg developed. A loss of speech occurred. Serious disturbances developed in activities of the heart and breathing.

Medical forces enlisted to treat Comrade Stalin: Professor-therapist P. E. Lukomsky of the Academy of Medical Science of the U.S.S.R.

Professor-neuropathologist V. Kononov.

Professor-therapist A. L. Myasnikov.

Professor-therapist E. M. Tareyev.

Professor-neuropathologist R. A. Tkachev.

Docent (teacher)-therapist V. I. Ivahov.

Physicians in Charge. The treatment of Comrade Stalin is conducted under the guidance of A. F. Tretyakov, Minister of Public Health, of the U.S.S.R. and I. Kuperin, chief of the Medical Sanitary Board of the Kremlin.

The treatment of Comrade Stalin is conducted under constant supervision of the Central Committee of the Communist party of the Soviet Union and the Council of Ministers of the U.S.S.R. as do our entire party and our whole Soviet people, realizing the full significance of the fact that the grave illness of Comrade Stalin will involve his more or less prolonged non-participation in leading activity.

In guiding the party and the country, the Central Committee of the Council of Ministers with full seriousness take into account all circumstances connected with the temporary withdrawal of Comrade Stalin from leading the state and party activity.

The Central Committee and the Council of Ministers express confidence that our party and the whole Soviet people will in these difficult days display the greatest unity and cohesion, steadfastness of spirit and vigilance and will redouble their energies in building Communism in our country and will rally still closer round the Central Committee of the Communist party and the government of the Soviet Union.

better organized than we know. Certainly we cannot afford any let-up on our own part."

Vorys said:

"The Kremlin has called the shots all along and all of them are prisoners of the Kremlin."

"There may be a temporary period of quiet while the successor to Stalin is getting himself adjusted, but in the long run I wouldn't expect much change."

House Republican Leader Haleck of Indiana said:

"I would hope that with control passing to other hands we might expect a more reasonable attitude on the part of Soviet Russia."

U.N. Group Elects Czech. GENEVA, March 4 (AP)—The United Nations economic commission for Europe elected Joseph Ullrich of Czechoslovakia its chairman today, choosing an eastern European for the post for the first time. Ullrich was nominated by the Soviet Union and seconded by Britain. The United States and Yugoslavia opposed his election and Turkey abstained.

EDEN IN U.S., SORRY TO HEAR ABOUT STALIN'S ILLNESS

Declines to Comment on What Might Happen if Russian Premier Died.

NEW YORK, March 4 (AP)—Anthony Eden, British foreign secretary, said today he was "sorry" to hear of Prime Minister Stalin's illness. He declined to speculate on what might happen if the Russian leader died.

Eden arrived aboard the liner Queen Elizabeth with R. A. Butler, chancellor of the exchequer, for Washington talks primarily concerning British commonwealth financial problems.

A reporter asked "What effect would the death of Stalin have on world conditions?"

"A very good question for you to ask but not a very wise one for me to answer," Eden said.

The two British leaders, accompanied by their wives, were scheduled to fly to Washington this afternoon.

Bidding for continued help from the United States, Eden and Butler offer as an inducement a promise to make the pound sterling a convertible currency—freely exchangeable for other moneys, including the dollar.

The United States economic representatives at the scheduled talks will be Secretary of the Treasury George M. Humphrey and his deputy for debt management and monetary policy, R. Randolph Burgess. Dulles will be assisted in the conferences by Lewis Douglas, former director of the budget and former Ambassador to Britain.

The Eisenhower Administration takes the attitude that any solution of Britain's economic troubles must at the least not hurt other allies of the United States and at the best should be part of an over-all program which would benefit all, while not weakening the United States economy.

ONLY GOOD RED IS A DEAD ONE, VAN FLEET SAYS

WASHINGTON, March 4 (UPI)—Representative Wickersham (Dem.), Oklahoma, asked Gen. James A. Van Fleet at a House committee hearing today what he thought of the death of Joseph Stalin.

"I don't know," the former Eighth Army commander said. "It could be either way."

Representative Rivers (Dem.), South Carolina, remarked that the death of any Communist would be a good thing. The man who has been fighting Communists in Korea agreed.

"The only good one is a dead one," Van Fleet said.

TUCKER, EAGLETON GET ADDITIONAL WARD SUPPORT IN NOMINATION BID

Organization in 13th for Ex-Civil Defense Chief, 11th and 12th Back His Rival—10 Still Uncommitted in Race.

Raymond R. Tucker and Mark D. Eagleton, rival candidates for the Democratic nomination for Mayor, received additional support from regular ward organizations last night.

Tucker, former city smoke commissioner and civil defense director, was endorsed by the Thirteenth Ward Organization. Eagleton, former Police Board and School Board president, received the endorsement of the Eleventh and Twelfth Ward Organizations. The Twelfth is Tucker's home ward.

Also announcing its endorsement of Eagleton was a Seventeenth Ward group headed by Alderman Raymond A. Egan. With 10 wards still uncommitted on their preference in the mayoralty campaign, Eagleton has the lead over Tucker—12 to 6—in obtaining organizational backing. Tucker is counting heavily on support from independent voters.

Tucker Urges Big Vote. In brief talks before the Thirteenth Ward group and a citizens' committee meeting in the Twelfth ward, Tucker last night urged voters to go to the polls in the March 13 primary, pointing out that failure to do so will allow a small segment of citizens to choose the Democratic nominee.

Tucker's backers, in the meantime, continued their charge that the political faction headed by former Sheriff Thomas F. Callanan and Morris A. Shenker, attorney, is seeking to elect Eagleton.

Clifford G. Haley, last-minute entry as a candidate for the Republican nomination, denied today a statement made by Tucker's backers that he entered the race at the inducement of the Callanan-Shenker faction in a move to divert votes from Tucker.

Haley said he had been appointed to the Election Board, from which he resigned to become a candidate, on the recommendation of George Hartmann, then chairman of the Republican City Central Committee. Tucker forces had said Haley, although a Republican, had been named to the Board by Gov. Forrest Smith on recommendation of Callanan, a Democrat.

Circuit Attorney Edward L. Dowd, chairman of Tucker's speakers' bureau, said professional politicians are generally opposed to Tucker "because they want a man they can handle in talks before Twelfth and Thirteenth ward groups. Dowd stated: "The professional politicians praise Ray Tucker's record as smoke commissioner, director of civil defense and chairman of the Board of Fireholders which grew up the proposed city charter.

"But then they ask themselves: 'Will he go along with us? Will he follow our ideas on appointments in the city government? Can we handle him?' The finest recommendation Ray Tucker can bring is that he will not go along."

"Tweedledum and Tweedledee." If Tucker is not nominated "voters will leave the Democratic party in droves, because the choice then will be between Tweedledum and Tweedledee," Dowd said.

He charged that the "real powers behind the opposition to Tucker are being carefully concealed." James Waechter, who was Callanan's attorney when the latter was sheriff and is a former law partner of Eagleton, is "one person secretly pulling the strings," Dowd said.

City Counselor James E. Crowe, also addressing the Thirteenth Ward organization, praised Tucker's record, saying: "His intimate contact with government places him in an enviable position. Ray Tucker can step into the office of mayor and carry on without loss of time."

James J. Lee, chairman of a citizens' committee for Eagleton, said today that Morris Shenker had been approached recently by two "principal backers" of Tucker in an effort to obtain his support.

Former Head of Steamfitter Fund Is Questioned in Two Bombings

JOSEPH E. BARRY

Harry G. Hale Interrogated in Blasts at Union Headquarters, Callanan's Home.

Harry G. Hale, former director of the Steamfitters' educational and welfare fund, was questioned last night at the direction of Circuit Attorney Edward L. Dowd about the recent bombings of the headquarters of AFL Steamfitters Local 562 and the home of former Sheriff Thomas F. Callanan, present director of the fund.

The questioning, conducted at police headquarters by Assistant Circuit Attorney Fred Mayer, was in connection with the grand jury investigation of the bombings, and of the operation of the welfare fund to which contractors contribute.

The grand jury, which met yesterday to hear union members and contractors doing business with Local 562, will resume its inquiry tomorrow afternoon.

Hale, who served three prison terms for robbery under the name "Harry Hufendick," was a business agent for Local 562 before his appointment as the original director of the welfare fund.

He was reportedly ousted as director of the fund about a year ago because of a disagreement with Lawrence L. Callanan, ex-convict boss of Local 562. He was not reappointed to his business agent's job, and told police he has not worked as a steamfitter because of failing health.

Booked for investigation. When taken to police headquarters last night, Hale was booked for investigation. Following interrogation by Mayer he was released and permitted to return to his home at 2810 Barrett street.

Now 33 years old, Hale changed his name from Hufendick about 12 years ago, after completing his third term in the Missouri penitentiary, which was for a bank robbery at St. Charles.

Five former convicts were among the steamfitter witnesses heard by the grand jury in a long session yesterday. They were: Lawrence (Mad Dog) McBride, Arthur J. Berne, notorious safe burglar; Ralph Brindley, John (Monk) Wade and Ernest Wallace. McBride and Brindley told reporters they had obtained their memberships in the steamfitters' organization at Enid, Okla. When asked why he had gone to Oklahoma to obtain a card, when he works here, McBride replied, "I would rather not say."

Berne praised Lawrence Callanan "for giving us a chance." "You have to get so old before you wake up and find out you must work," the three-time former convict observed. "I'm just trying to work, no more safe-cracking for me," he added.

Tells of Job Transfers. A number of the steamfitters said they had been withdrawn from the Union Electric construction job in St. Louis county since the grand jury began its investigation, but were unable to account for their transfer to other jobs. There have been reports that the force at the Union Electric project was reduced on orders of union business agents.

Records of the J. E. Barry Co., heating firm in which Lawrence Callanan was said to be interested, were delivered to the grand jury yesterday under subpoena. Joseph E. Barry, a former union official, who heads the firm, denied that Callanan has an interest in the Barry Co., financial or otherwise. The company's records will be studied by the jury.

Other contractors testifying yesterday were Leonard Vollman, vice president of the Thermal Engineering Co., whose firm hires union steamfitters, and Charles Tanner, one of the contractor trustees of the welfare fund. The board of trustees is composed of three contractors and three union representatives.

Additional members of Local 562 will be heard when the jury resumes the inquiry tomorrow.

He declined to name the two persons to whom he referred. Lee, addressing workers at the citizens' committee headquarters, pointed out that John J. Dwyer, chairman of the Democratic City Central Committee, who opposed Callanan forces in the primary last August, is supporting Eagleton.

Holloran Taking No Sides. Mark R. Holloran, Democratic national committeeman for Missouri, told a Post-Dispatch reporter he "will take no sides" in the primary because of his position on the national committee.

Tucker and Eagleton are scheduled to make talks on Post-Dispatch Station KSD-TV next week. Tucker will speak at 6:30 p.m. Monday, Eagleton at the same time Tuesday.

Carl G. Stifel, candidate for the Republican nomination for Mayor, said last night that the Democratic city administration has lost $8,465,000 for St. Louis in funds for the Third Street Interregional Highway.

The $8,465,000 had been set aside three years ago by the Missouri State Highway Commission and the Federal Government to use for construction of the highway, but a bill introduced by State Senator Anthony M. Webb of St. Louis held up construction, Stifel said.

Although the bill was illegal, Mayor Darst refused to bring a lawsuit to test its validity. Stifel told the Republican City Central Committee at a dinner meeting at the York Hotel. The highway commission then took the $8,465,000 and used it for building an inter-regional highway in Kansas City, he said.

Stifel's candidacy has been endorsed by the central committee.

$14,750 DONATED IN THIRD DAY OF RED CROSS DRIVE

Gifts Total $117,603 in $1,257,092 Campaign—McDonnell Employees Pledge $10,000.

Contributions of $14,750 to the Red Cross 1953 fund campaign were announced today as volunteer workers battled continuing severe weather in the third day of the drive to raise $1,257,092.

Yesterday's gifts brought the total to $117,603. Richard Baldwin, campaign chairman, said the money going for typing, taping, bottling, medical supplies, nurses' and physicians' salaries, distribution and recruitment.

Frank J. Uhlenbrock, a test gunner at St. Louis Ordnance Plant, who, as a Marine, lost a leg at Guam in World War II, gave a cash gift to the Red Cross yesterday along with his eighteenth birthday of blood since 1949.

Recalling that his life was saved by several transfusions aboard a minesweeper in the Guam action, he said that "no one could refuse to support the Red Cross or the blood program" if he had observed the way the organization operates.

Company gifts reported yesterday included $404 from the Semi-Steel Casing Co., 109 East Quincy street, a 5 per cent increase over last year. Highland Box Co., 812 Olive street, reported a 73 per cent increase over its 1952 contribution and Security Fire Door Co., 3044 Lambda avenue, reported a 12 per cent rise in donations from the company and employees.

AUTO PUSHED AGAINST SIDE OF MOVING TRAIN; TWO HURT

Two men were seriously injured last night when an automobile driven by one of them crashed against the rear of a moving freight train. The accident occurred just east of Fairmont City.

The men, taken to St. Mary's Hospital, East St. Louis, were Joseph Goveral, 2123 Benton street, St. Louis, and Joseph Gard, Caseyville.

Gard had stopped his machine at a railroad crossing on United States Highway 40 to allow a freight train to pass. Illinois highway patrolmen said, when Goveral's automobile crashed against the rear of Gard's machine.

Streetcars over the entire Public Service Co. system were immobilized for periods ranging up to nearly two hours today by a power failure caused by a small fire at Union Electric Co.'s substation at 6441 Page avenue, Wellston. The shutdown also affected 100 industries in St. Louis and the county.

Hundreds of St. Louisans were delayed in getting to work when the power failure halted approximately 270 streetcars at 8:07 a.m. at the height of the morning traffic rush.

The Public Service Co. reported all streetcars back in operation at 9:55 o'clock. Many industrial customers began receiving electricity within a few minutes, the company said, and normal service was fully restored at 9:52.

Union Electric Co. employees and Wellston firm, wearing gas masks, were hampered by fumes and dense smoke in fighting the fire, which threw out the entire 25-cycle system serving trolleys and some industrial plants.

The fire, preceded by an electrical explosion, was in switching gear in the substation's basement. The machinery receives 25-cycle power from Keokuk, Ia., and distributes it to all local users. The fire caused $5000 damage.

Two Union Electric Co. employees received minor injuries. They were Harold S. Lakey, 3250 South Grand boulevard, who suffered facial burns and John W. Pittman, 129 West Essex avenue, Kirkwood, who was overcome by smoke.

Streetcar passengers flocked to bus stops. Public Service Co. put into service all available buses to handle the emergency loads. Supervisors called for additional busses from other routes and extra drivers were summoned.

Crowds waited at major transfer points along the University, Delmar, Hodiament, Wellston, Jefferson, Grand and Broadway streetcar lines.

Industries affected by the power failure, Union Electric spokesmen said, included Alpha Portland Cement Co., Missouri Portland Cement Co., General Electric Co., and Wallace Pencil Co., in the county, and several industrial plants in the city.

Streetcars over the entire Public Service Co. system were immobilized for periods ranging up to nearly two hours today by a power failure caused by a small fire at Union Electric Co.'s substation at 6441 Page avenue, Wellston. The shutdown also affected 100 industries in St. Louis and the county.

Hundreds of St. Louisans were delayed in getting to work when the power failure halted approximately 270 streetcars at 8:07 a.m. at the height of the morning traffic rush.

The Public Service Co. reported all streetcars back in operation at 9:55 o'clock. Many industrial customers began receiving electricity within a few minutes, the company said, and normal service was fully restored at 9:52.

Union Electric Co. employees and Wellston firm, wearing gas masks, were hampered by fumes and dense smoke in fighting the fire, which threw out the entire 25-cycle system serving trolleys and some industrial plants.

The fire, preceded by an electrical explosion, was in switching gear in the substation's basement. The machinery receives 25-cycle power from Keokuk, Ia., and distributes it to all local users. The fire caused $5000 damage.

Two Union Electric Co. employees received minor injuries. They were Harold S. Lakey, 3250 South Grand boulevard, who suffered facial burns and John W. Pittman, 129 West Essex avenue, Kirkwood, who was overcome by smoke.

Streetcar passengers flocked to bus stops. Public Service Co. put into service all available buses to handle the emergency loads. Supervisors called for additional busses from other routes and extra drivers were summoned.

Crowds waited at major transfer points along the University, Delmar, Hodiament, Wellston, Jefferson, Grand and Broadway streetcar lines.

Industries affected by the power failure, Union Electric spokesmen said, included Alpha Portland Cement Co., Missouri Portland Cement Co., General Electric Co., and Wallace Pencil Co., in the county, and several industrial plants in the city.

The streetcar paralysis aggravated traffic congestion caused by last night's light snow, but no serious tie-up resulted. Express Highway was closed at 1:30 a.m. today and reopened at 4:30 after

3 ELECTION BOARD MEMBERS SEND REPLY TO GOVERNOR

The three remaining members of the St. Louis election board met today and drafted a reply to Gov. Phil M. Donnelly's request for their resignation.

Chairman Paul C. Calcaterra declined to reveal the contents of the answer until after its receipt by the Governor. It was mailed today. Other members signing it were Sigmund M. Bass and Leo J. Hennessey. The fourth member, Clifford G. Haley, had forwarded his resignation when he filed as candidate for the Republican nomination for mayor.

While Calcaterra declined to say what answer was given the Governor, he remarked to the Post-Dispatch that he had signed some pay vouchers today, adding: "It was probably my last official act."

Democratic Leaders Won't Accept G.O.P. - Revised Pacts Resolution

Senate Policy Committee Says It Thinks Amendment Also Is 'Unacceptable' to State Department.

WASHINGTON, March 4 (AP)—The Senate Democratic Policy Committee today tabbed "unacceptable" today the Republican-revised resolution condemning Russia for "enslaving" other peoples.

The Democratic group expressed belief that it is also "unacceptable" to the State Department. The Policy Committee's action foreshadowed a bitter debate when the resolution comes up for Senate consideration.

The Republican Policy Committee already has given formal introduction to the amendment the Senate Foreign Relations Committee made to the Eisenhower Administration's resolution.

By a vote of 8 to 6, the Foreign Relations Committee yesterday wrote into the resolution a declaration that "its adoption would not constitute any determination by the Congress as to the validity or invalidity of any wartime agreements made at Yalta, Potsdam or other Big Three meetings. The Republicans who backed this amendment contend they are simply out to make sure that adoption of the resolution would not be interpreted as approving the World War II agreements.

Taft's Comment. Senator Taft of Ohio, the G.O.P. floor leader, said President Eisenhower and Secretary of State Dulles agree that the resolution would not affect those agreements.

Taft told reporters "there is no difference I know of" between him and the administration as to the wording of the resolution. Taft said the question was discussed at the regular White House meeting of Eisenhower and Congressional leaders Monday, and that it was "left up to us" how the resolution should be worded.

The actual language voted into the resolution was not submitted to the State Department. The Democrats said they had seen no official word from the President that it is agreeable to him.

Democratic Leader Johnson of Texas, who is also chairman of his party's Policy Committee, said the Democrats would stick by Eisenhower's original resolution condemning Soviet perversion of wartime agreements by enslaving free peoples.

Democratic Statement. He said the committee approved unanimously this statement: "We accepted President Eisenhower's anti-enslavement resolution as a sincere effort to achieve bipartisan condemnation of Soviet imperialism. We agreed to join the President and support that resolution in the same spirit in which it was submitted to Congress by him. We repeat that pledge."

The statement added the amendment "would negate the resolution" and said: "It would offer the Communists an excuse for their violations of international agreements by raising a doubt as to the validity of the agreements which have been violated."

The Democrats called upon the Republicans "to reconsider their position" so that Congress can join the President in "his first specific request in the field of foreign policy."

Taft told reporters that Dulles "has said the same thing" as the language contained in the amendment.

"Why shouldn't we say it?" he asked. Taft added that "there is no difference of opinion as to what the resolution says."

Not a Break, Taft Says. Taft was questioned about published reports that the Foreign Relations Committee's action represented a break between him and the administration. It was then he declared he knew of no differences between him and the administration.

Secretary of State Dulles, testifying at the Capitol last week in support of the resolution, said it would not serve any good purpose in his view to change the wording as submitted by Eisenhower. He said the President had gone over the wording of the resolution carefully and personally approved it.

Taft said there will be no attempt to get Senate action on the resolution this week. "We'll try to let everybody cool down," he said, "and see if anyone has any suggestions."

He added that the serious illness of Premier Joseph Stalin of Russia might make some difference in the time for consideration of the resolution.

Senators Sparkman (Dem.), Alabama, and Humphrey (Dem.), Minnesota, Foreign Relations Committee members, said the amendment meant that Congress and the President would be denouncing Russia for violating agreements which might or might not have been valid in the first place.

MOSSADEGH TELLS ASSEMBLY TO HALT ROYAL INTRIGUE

Iran Premier Reported Talking of Referendum in His Struggle With Shah.

TEHRAN, March 4 (AP)—Premier Mohammed Mossadegh kept up the offensive today in his struggle for power with Shah Mohammed Reza Pahlavi, demanding that Parliament intervene in alleged royal court intrigues against his Government.

The move was disclosed last night by the semi-official newspaper Bakhtar Emrooz as Tehran returned closer to normal after riotous demonstrations in which three persons were killed and an estimated 60 injured since Saturday.

Bakhtar Emrooz said Mossadegh is insisting that Parliament approach the royal court and demand elimination of intrigues. The newspaper asserted that the Premier has threatened to call a referendum of the people if the palace does not take action against the alleged plotters.

If the referendum is favorable to him, the newspaper said, the Premier will be in a position to act for himself. If the vote goes against him, he will resign, it added.

Just when Parliament could take any action was not clear, however. The legislators, scheduled to consider a motion of confidence in the Premier, were prevented from meeting yesterday when opposition deputies boycotted the session. There were indications, though, that some oppositionists were now tending toward the Mossadegh banner.

The capital city was quiet today. Shops and bazaars that closed down at the start of the trouble Saturday night were beginning to open. With the apparent passing of the crisis, 28 pro-Mossadegh deputies moved out of their refuge in the Parliament building and returned home.

Bakhtar Emrooz also reported names of some of the Iranian military and political leaders who have been arrested since the start of the demonstrations. Opposition newspapers have said Mossadegh's police rounded up 70 retired and active officers who participated in demonstrations for the Shah.

Among those listed by Bakhtar Emrooz were Gen. Abbas Gharan, army chief of staff under former Premier Ali Razmara who was assassinated in 1961; Gholi Hussein Foroohar, Finance Minister under Razmara, and Jemal Imami, former opposition leader in Parliament.

The list also included editors of five opposition newspapers, a number of opposition writers and several high-ranking army officers.

ADLAI STEVENSON WINS GAG WRITERS' 'SNICKERS AWARD'

WASHINGTON, March 4 (AP)—Adlai Stevenson ran up a landslide victory over a squad of Washington politicians to win the "snickers award" of the National Association of Gagwriters.

His quips during his unsuccessful Democratic campaign for the presidency last fall were adjudged superior to the output of former Vice President Alben W. Barkley, former White House military aid Harry Vaughn, George Allen, Mrs. Perle Mesta, minister to Luxembourg, Senator Charles W. Tobey (Rep.), New Hampshire, Milton D. Salle—and even Harry S. Truman.

A scroll is being prepared by the gag writers, with headquarters in New York, for presentation to Stevenson during the eighth annual national laugh week, which starts April Fool's day. Getting it to him will be a problem. He sailed from San Francisco Monday for a four-month trip around the world.

PROPOSES POSTAGE STAMP HONORING NATION'S MINERS

WASHINGTON, March 4 (AP)—Representative Price (Dem.), Illinois, introduced yesterday a bill to honor the coal industry and miners by issuance of a special postage stamp.

"There has never been a stamp issued in honor of the great coal industry or the men who dig the nation's coal, often at the risk of their lives," he told the House.

Price said he introduced the bill in compliance with a resolution adopted Feb. 17 by the Illinois House.

Bill for State Bar on Closed Shop In Labor Contracts Introduced

By a Staff Correspondent of the Post-Dispatch.

JEFFERSON CITY, March 4—A bill which would abolish closed shop provisions in labor contracts and thus curb labor union strength in Missouri was introduced in the House yesterday by Representative C. D. Hamilton (Dem.), New London.

It provides that no person should be denied the opportunity to obtain, or retain, employment because of membership, or non-membership, in a labor union, or because of his refusal to join such an organization.

The measure specifically prohibits anyone entering into a contract to exclude persons from employment because of membership or non-membership in a union. It also prohibits compelling anyone to pay dues to a labor organization as a prerequisite to employment.

Any person denied, or deprived, of employment through violation of provisions of the bill would be entitled to recover damages from the responsible party to the extent of compensation for reasonable estimated loss of income plus an equal amount as exemplary damages.

Persons convicted of violation of the proposed law would be guilty of a misdemeanor, punishable by a maximum penalty of six months in jail and a $500 fine.

Among other bills introduced was one which would require that persons named by the Governor to fill vacancies in elective offices be of the same political faith as the officials they replace.

The House passed a series of bills, sponsored by Representative Forrest, Mitterdorf (Rep.), St. Louis county, which would: Authorize pension plans for paid fire department members in cities over 3000 population, subject to approval of the voters; authorize payment of pension benefits to firemen for death or disability from disease arising from their duties, and provide for establishment of merit systems for paid fire departments, if the voters of the district approve.

Amid a chorus of wolf calls and a sprinkling of sheep bleats the House also passed and sent to the Senate the much-debated bill to cut the bounty paid for wolf carcasses in Missouri from $30 to $15. The vote was 94 to 19.

The House tentatively approved a bill to increase the amount of monthly benefits which might be paid old-age pensioners to $83. The maximum now is $55 a month.

The measure was ordered perfected by a voice vote after it had been amended to provide the $85 instead of the $75 a month called for in the original bill.

As usual the bill was debated at length, some of the legislators contending that no stone should be left unturned to assist "grandma and grandpa." Others, seeming somewhat more logical, argued that the House should wait to see where the money was to come from before acting on the bill.

Tentative approval also was given a bill which would provide a comprehensive set of rules to govern drivers on Missouri's highways. The measure was ordered perfected only after adoption of an amendment to eliminate a section which would have required that all new automobiles sold in the state after Jan. 1, 1955, would have to be equipped with automatic signal devices.

TWO DOCTORS HERE GIVE OPINIONS ON STALIN'S STROKE

Bulletins from Moscow on Soviet Prime Minister Joseph Stalin's illness "indicate a serious brain injury, but he might live for some time," Dr. W. Barry Wood Jr., physician-in-chief at Barnes Hospital, told the Post-Dispatch today.

"People do live for weeks and some times even longer, following a cerebral hemorrhage or a cerebral thrombus (block)," he explained. "But the older the person, the less likely he is to survive." Stalin is 73 years old.

"He has had a fairly serious stroke," Dr. Wood said, after latest reports from Moscow were read to him. "We cannot predict whether he will live through it."

The serious signs are the irregular respirations. That indicates serious brain damage."

Dr. Cyril J. Costello, medical director of City Hospital, said: "Looking at Stalin statistically, he might have a 50-50 chance of surviving. He may have more massive hemorrhages or he may develop pneumonia or cardiac failure. Actually, he may have a better chance of surviving than his doctors. I noticed in the first announcements that his treatment is under the supervision of the Communist party. His physicians probably are painting the most dismal picture to make it safer for themselves. If he dies."

Van Fleet Says U.N. Can Win in Korea

field and purge the enemy and polish them off."

The general told the House Armed Services Committee there are no "shortages of a serious nature" hampering the Eighth Army.

"Best Equipped" Army.

"It is my considered opinion that the Eighth Army is the best equipped, best fed, best clothed, best housed and cared for army we have ever produced," Van Fleet said.

Van Fleet arrived for the hearing wearing an "Eisenhower jacket" with only a few of his many decorations displayed.

Chairman Short opened the hearing by praising Van Fleet as a "good soldier, tried in combat, one of the great generals of our times."

Short went on to say he had asked for the public hearing in order that the American people might have the fullest information, to which they were entitled.

Van Fleet said at the start he would like to pay tribute to the men of the Eighth Army—"the greatest generation of Americans we have ever produced."

Then Van Fleet, whose son is listed as missing in action in Korea, dropped his voice to say: "Your sons, our sons—God bless them."

The general went on then to describe the Korean war situation as a "sitdown of our own choice."

He said the Eighth Army had "complete supremacy" over the Communists in three vital areas, listing them as: (1) quality of troops, (2) firepower of weapons, and (3) mobility and flexibility to meet new situations.

"My personal opinion is that we can win in Korea," Van Fleet said. "It must be a military victory."

Asked by Representative Vinson (Dem., Georgia), whether the Eighth Army was in a position now to launch a successful offensive, the general said he would have to answer in executive session.

Vinson wanted to know whether more men and materials would not be needed for an offensive now.

Van Fleet said he and other Korean commanders always would "like to have more of the means of war."

Thinks Victory Was Near.
Representative Amden (Rep., Illinois), assistant House floor leader, asked whether the war would have been won if United Nations forces had followed up their advantages in 1951.

"I would like to think so," Van Fleet replied. "I was the man in charge at the time."

One of the questions that has troubled Congress members has been repeated reports of shortages of various kinds of supplies, including ammunition.

In a general discussion of the Korean situation, Van Fleet made these points:

1. The American people must not expect the South Korean troops to replace all American units in Korea at this time—and American troops must remain in Korea. He said the ROKs comprise 14 of the 22 infantry divisions in action.

2. The Eighth Army "is running short on replacements for American units" and the replacement system is not satisfactory.

3. The on-the-spot training of Republic of Korea troops gives the South Korean soldier basic training that is "even far better than our own boys in America receive."

4. New ROK divisions can be trained and equipped at a "fraction of the cost" of training and equipping an American division.

5. The American units in Korea are "under strength and short on junior leaders and the skills it takes" for combat.

6. The South Koreans—even the women—are ready and willing to fight for their freedom and the North Koreans, in his opinion, would join the South Koreans against the Communists except for the fact that "they have a gun at their back."

GEN. JAMES A. VAN FLEET in witness chair at House Armed Services Committee hearing today.

Van Fleet had high praise for the South Koreans as fighting men. "We have no corner in America on aptitude or bravery," he said. "The Oriental has these qualities."

He said the Korean was "a cheaper man to maintain" because he was on the spot and did not require transportation. His pay is about 10 cents a month with no allowances, no insurance, and no home leaves.

Van Fleet said with great feeling: "There are only two things this (South Korea) nation has: manpower and a willingness to fight for freedom. They have nothing else except their morale. It's a destroyed country."

Van Fleet said when the war began in Korea, there were about 8,000,000 people in North Korea and about 20,000,000 in South Korea. He said the North Korean population had dwindled to about 4,000,000.

He said many had come into South Korea, others had been killed in the fighting, and many impressed into service by the Communists.

After Van Fleet completed his testimony in the unusual open-to-the-public session, he was questioned further at a 40-minute closed meeting.

When it broke up, Short told reporters that Van Fleet "doesn't have the answer" to ending the stalemate in Korea and "no individual has the answer."

He said the general did not give the committee any specific recommendation "for or against" a U.N. offensive at this time.

Short went on to say that, on the basis of Van Fleet's secret testimony, "You've got to have a military victory" in Korea.

"Before you do," Short added, "you've got to build up strength on land, sea and air. We need more of everything."

Short and Van Fleet had a brief interview then for the benefit of television cameras.

During this, Van Fleet said: "I would recommend no withdrawal of American units until we have solved Korea."

Short declined to say whether there was any discussion with Van Fleet in the closed meeting of possible use of atomic weapons in Korea.

Tomorrow the general will cross to the other side of the Capitol for closed-door talks with the Senate's Armed Services and Foreign Relations Committees.

Today's meetings were a follow-up to Van Fleet's confidential talk with President Eisenhower soon after his arrival in Washington yesterday. The general firmly refused to disclose whether he had discussed war plans with the President or had made any sort of report.

After his White House meeting with President Eisenhower, the 50-year-old warrior who will retire March 31 told reporters:

"I'm certainly never going to admit the Eighth Army could be defeated. The American Army has never been defeated and it never will be defeated. Those are my sentiments."

Already heavily decorated for achievements in World War II and as American military adviser to the Greeks in their fight against Red guerrillas, Van Fleet now has another decoration for his tunic. Eisenhower gave him a third Oak Leaf cluster to his Distinguished Service Medal for his leadership of the Eighth Army for the last two years.

Last night Van Fleet was guest of honor at a dinner given by Gen. and Mrs. J. Lawton Collins at their Fort McNair residence. President and Mrs. Eisenhower attended.

GEORGI MALENKOV IS REPUTED NO. 1 MAN AFTER STALIN

politician and Malenkov has been closely associated with him since the purges of 1930, although he was not admitted into the Politburo until 1941.

Little is known about Beria, who like Stalin is a Georgian. As head of the secret police he undoubtedly knows as much about purges and liquidations as Malenkov. He is 51 years old, nine years younger than Molotov and three years older than Malenkov. He became a revolutionist as a student in 1915 and is reported to have joined the Bolshevik party at the age of 18. He became a secret police operative when 23 years old. He came into prominence in 1938, after the assassination of Sergei Kirov, another Stalin favorite, and has been on the rise since. His first big job was to purge the purgers.

During the war he was decorated as a Hero of Socialist Labor for increasing the production of arms and ammunition and in 1945 was appointed a marshal. Russian experts assert that he is now in charge of Soviet atomic development among his other duties.

Molotov is the only prominent Russian left, besides Stalin, who played a major role in the 1917 revolution. He was in St. Petersburg when the first revolution broke out, while Lenin and Trotsky were abroad and Stalin was in Siberian exile. He and Stalin have worked together since 1912.

He looks something like a schoolmaster and is precise in his speech. He has traveled abroad to diplomatic conferences, which is said to make him suspect in the eyes of leaders who have remained in Russia. For many years, his picture was often placed next to that of Stalin.

This was interpreted to mean that Stalin had chosen him his successor.

Some Russian experts speculate that in the event of Stalin's death a committee of three men will be created to set policy, direct Soviet affairs and make executive decisions. Such a triumvirate might be composed of Malenkov, a party leader; Molotov, expert on foreign affairs; and Beria as the director of the secret police.

Russian history, however, would indicate that such a committee would be short-lived because totalitarian state requires a single dictator, who can be worshiped and feared like "Big Brother" in George Orwell's novel "1984," and speak for the Kremlin as Stalin did at Tehran, Yalta and Potsdam.

Soviet relations with the outside world will depend largely on what type of man succeeds Stalin or acts for him during his illness.

Even if Stalin survives, an Eisenhower-Stalin meeting is, of course, more out of the question than ever. It is unlikely that the White House or the Kremlin would want Eisenhower to meet with a Russian who could not speak with the authority that goes with an established position.

There was speculation in Washington that the departure of Charles (Chip) Bohlen to Moscow, as the new United States Ambassador, might be speeded. Bohlen's nomination to succeed George F. Kennan, declared persona non grata by Moscow last fall, has not been acted on by the Senate but no significant opposition to him has been voiced.

Bohlen and Secretary of State John Foster Dulles conferred today.

Bohlen is one of the few Americans who knows the top Soviet personalities, the Russian language and history, and Soviet ideology. His presence in Moscow, at such a portentous time, might be of tremendous value to this Government.

The United States Embassy in Moscow has been headed by a subordinate official, Joseph D. Beam, since the Russians expelled Kennan.

OUTSIDERS GIVEN REPORT ON STALIN AHEAD OF RUSSIANS

LONDON, March 4 (AP)—The first announcement to the world of Joseph Stalin's critical illness was made by Moscow radio at 5:15 a.m. Greenwich mean time (11:15 p.m. Tuesday St. Louis time).

It came in the regular service of the official Soviet news agency Tass, broadcast in Russian for the press abroad.

The Moscow radio's home service bulletin, which usually gives the leading article from the Communist party's newspaper Pravda and an abstract of the Moscow papers' contents, was not broadcast as usual at 5 a.m.

Instead, the home service played music.

At 8:30 a.m. (11:30 p.m. St. Louis time), however, the Moscow radio home service repeated the first announcement made 18 minutes earlier to the world at large.

LANSING RAY AT WHITE HOUSE

WASHINGTON, March 4 (AP)—Lansing Ray, publisher of the St. Louis Globe-Democrat, called on President Eisenhower today to pay his respects.

VISHINSKY ABSENT AS U.N. RESUMES DEBATE ON KOREA

Soviet Delegate Zorin Says Stalin's Illness Reduces Discussion to 'Minor Question.'

By ALVIN H. GOLDSTEIN
 A Staff Correspondent of the Post-Dispatch.

UNITED NATIONS, N. Y.,
 March 4—Poland today took up the attack on United States conditions for a Korean truce, indicated that no change in Russian policy was to be anticipated in the United Nations Political Committee with the announcement of the serious illness of Premier Joseph Stalin.

Polish Foreign Minister Stanislaw Skrzyszewski began his address at a session opened tardily when delegates loitered in the corridors discussing the significance of the Russian ruler's condition. The Soviet delegation arrived on time but Foreign Minister Andrei Y. Vishinsky was absent. Members of the mission declined comment.

Echoing the bellicose speech of Vishinsky, the Polish spokesman declared that the "ruling circles" of the United States had adopted a policy of war, not peace as claimed. This the work of the General Assembly to attain an armistice in Korea was blocked.
 Refusal of the "American bloc" to invite Red China and Communist Korea to the conference handicapped the debate, he said.

Repeats Germ War Charges.
 Skrzyszewski repeated the Soviet-inspired stories of the use of bacterial weapons by American troops in Korea and like tales of U.N. atrocities against prisoners-of-war. He insisted that all captives must be exchanged without regard to their desires, as a condition of truce.

Lodge took the floor briefly to lash back at the Poles for repeating the germ warfare charges.
 He pointed out that the Communists have rejected all efforts to have neutral, international observers investigate these accusations.

China and Cuba also made brief remarks. After Russian Delegate Valerian Zorin gave a short supporting speech in behalf of the Polish advocate, the afternoon session was canceled for lack of speakers and adjournment was taken until tomorrow.
 At that time Sir Gladwin Jebb is expected to present views of the United Kingdom.

Speculation Aroused.
 There was speculation that Vishinsky knew about Stalin's illness
 Monday when he made his own policy declaration on Korea. Some officials noted at that time he omitted his usual references to Stalin and wondered if the omission had any significance.

Zorin said Stalin's illness reduced the U.N. debate on Korea to a "minor question."

Lodge withheld comment as did most other delegates and Secretary-General Trygve Lie.

Brazilian's Comment.
 Joao Carlos Muniz of Brazil, chairman of the Political Committee, commented:
 "In a dictatorship, anything that affects the capacity of life of a dictator is likely to have deep repercussions. When the dictator is the master of a great country like Russia, these repercussions are world-wide."

Stalin's Illness.
 Meanwhile, U.N. diplomats agreed that the death or incapacitation of Premier Stalin would throw the Assembly into a period of indecision. There was sharp disagreement on whether a change in leadership in Moscow would set the Kremlin on a more peaceful course or lead the world closer to a third world war.

The announcement of Stalin's grave illness caught U.N. diplomats and their staffs by surprise.
 Even the Russian representatives apparently had no advance news of the condition of their Premier.

It appeared certain that Stalin's stroke meant the end of serious maneuvers for peace in the current session of the U.N. Assembly. It stopped all speculation about a possible get-together between President Eisenhower and the Russian leader.

WOMEN'S WORK IN BUILDING A FREE NATION OUTLINED

Women can "help to build a free nation by work, love of beauty, and by worship," the Rev. W.
 F. Wolbrecht, president of St.
 Paul's College, Concordia, Mo., said here last night. He spoke at a meeting of the Western District
 Lutheran Women's Missionary League at the Sheraton Hotel.

"The Christian woman knows that we need to bring together our work, beauty and worship in our homes, schools and churches," he said. "Only a man would say,
 'I'm self made.' No woman would be likely to say it. Women are aware of our interdependence.
 They are also sensitive to individual differences."

The two-day meeting of Lutheran women is to close today.
 About 500 attended. Mrs. Leonard
 C. Wuerffel, wife of the dean of Concordia Seminary, is chairman of the committee that arranged the meeting.

Don't Be Fooled, Weatherman Warns; March Can Be Cold

Weatherman Harry F. Wahlgren prepared to close his books on one of St. Louis' warmest winters today, but refused to issue any reassuring long-range predictions of fair skies and an early spring. "Don't be fooled by singing 'The birds and the 60-degree days we had in February,'" he said. "March, more unpredictable at best, can turn out to be the coldest, wettest, nastiest month of the year."

The winter of 1952-53, Wahlgren limits, ranks with the coldest winters since the Bureau started keeping records 116 years ago. The average temperature, at 38.2 degrees, was

There was only 5.1 inches of measured precipitation, low normal.

M'CARTHY CLAIMS PLEDGE OF HELP FROM STATE DEPT.

May Not Have to Try to Subpena Files, He Says — Mum on Any Contact With White House.

WASHINGTON, March 4 (AP)—Senator McCarthy (Rep., Wis.), said today he has a pledge of co-operation from the State Department which may make it unnecessary to try to subpoena loyalty files of two department employees. Earlier, McCarthy had demanded the official reports, plus "the supporting documents" in the cases of Theodore Kaghan and Edmund Schechter, who worked for the department's Voice of America propaganda broadcasts. McCarthy told his Senate investigations subcommittee the word on co-operation came from R. W. Scott McLeod, the State Department's new security chief. "In whom I have the utmost confidence,"

He announced the subcommittee will await McLeod's promised study of files not immediately available to him before deciding on a next step in the move, which developed from mls investigation of the Voice activities. Mum on White House Contact. A reporter asked McCarthy whether he had been "in touch with the White House" about the order's application in the cases of Kaghan and Schechter. McCarthy's reply: "I predict rain this afternoon and rain this evening. That's what the Weather Bureau says, isn't it?"

He then told reporters, "I'll take Scotty McLeod's word. I'm sure we will have no argument at all."

McCarthy, addressing the subcommittee at a public hearing, said McLeod's memorandum told him that preliminary study of available file material indicated "there is a question on the suitability of one of the individuals" and that McLeod added "he does not want to comment" about the other man.

Kaghan and Schechter are now employed by the United States High Commissioner of Germany. Both men fall under supervision of the International Information Administration, the State Department agency which runs the Voice.

At the outset of today's hearings, McCarthy announced the department has agreed to give the subcommittee a memorandum on the security files of Kaghan and Schechter.

McCarthy had talked yesterday of subpoenaing the file papers on the two.

Similar requests for Congressional access to information in the files often in the past have been rejected, but this is the first time the issue has arisen squarely in the Eisenhower administration.

McCarthy Charges Sabotage. The issue became involved yesterday in the subcommittee's investigation of the Voice, which McCarthy contends has been sabotaged.

Without waiting for the memorandum to arrive, McCarthy called back to the witness stand Reed Harris, No. 2 man in the International Information Administration which runs the Voice, for further questioning. McCarthy and Harris had clashed bitterly in yesterday's public hearings.

Former President Truman and a number of his predecessors turned down similar Congressional requests, on the ground that Congress had no right to demand confidential documents of the executive branch.

Truman's order denying Congressional access to loyalty files has not been revoked by Eisenhower.

McCarthy said that if the State Department yielded in the cases of two men whose loyalty records he wants, it would not necessarily set a precedent.

His demand for the files topped a day of televised testimony which swirled yesterday about Harris, acting chief of IIA until Dr. Robert L. Johnson came in yesterday as the new boss.

BILL TO GIVE POLICE MORE TIME OFF DUTY IS KILLED

Special to the Post-Dispatch. JEFFERSON CITY, March 4—A bill which would have given policemen in St. Louis and Kansas City more time away from their duties was killed today by the House Committee on Municipal Corporations.

John J. Shanahan, an assistant city counselor in St. Louis, told the committee that fiscal authorities there were opposed to the measure because they do not have the money with which to pay salaries of the additional personnel that would be needed under the proposed law.

I. A. Long president of the St. Louis Board of Police Commissioners, in a letter to the committee said the board is studying working hours and would be opposed to any legislative action until that study is completed. Kansas City officials also opposed the measure which would give policemen two days off during each eight work days. They now have two days each month.

CLAYTON DRUG STORE HELD UP BY 3 MEN

Masked Robbers Flee With $458, Including $158 From Nine Customers.

Three masked robbers held up 10 persons in the Cole Drug Co., 6401 Clayton road, Clayton, last night and fled with $458, of which $158 was taken from the store's cash registers.

Three customers were in the store when the robbers entered. One stood at the door with a rifle partly concealed under his coat. Another threatened the customers and Jack Handelman, clerk, of 1241 Hamilton avenue, with a pistol, while the third scooped currency from cash registers.

Six other customers walked in while the holdup was in progress. They were lined up with the others at the back of the store and were searched.

Richard F. Bacon, of Chesterfield, Ill., one of the customers, managed to toss his wallet to a shelf as he was being taken to the back of the store. The other customers and the amounts taken from them were:

Dr. Robert Potashnick, 6432 San Bonita avenue, Clayton, $65; Daniel Long, 6332 Northwood avenue, Clayton, $30; James Cooper, 911 St. Rita avenue, $13; Anthony Serr, 6309 San Bonita, $3; Nathan Kiner, 921 DeMun avenue, Clayton, $19; Nathaniel French, 4472 Forest Park boulevard, $11; Richard W. Wright, 5723 Warren avenue, East St. Louis, $3; Ir. Fishbein, 6734 Clayton road, Richmond Heights, $7. Handelman lost $21 to the robbers.

2123 ON OPS LIST LACK PERMITS FOR ROOMING HOUSES

Discrepancy Between Federal and City Records Revealed in Check by Commissioner.

Nearly two thirds of the persons listed by the Office of Price Stabilization as having posted rent ceilings for rooming houses have no city rooming house permits, Building Commissioner Albert H. Baum announced yesterday.

check was an indication that many holders of city permits apparently failed to register ceiling rates with the OPS. There are about 2200 licensed rooming houses in the city, and of these only 1243 are included on the federal list.

Director of Public Safety Myles P. Dyer, whose office has jurisdiction over rooming houses in the city, said he believes many are operated without either city permits or registration with the OPS.

ROKS REGAIN HILL IN 23-HOUR FIGHT WITH 500 CHINESE

South Koreans Pull Back While Planes Plaster
Reds, Then Drive Enemy Off.

SEOUL, March 4 (AP)—South Korean infantrymen regained the top of an outpost hill position on the central Korean front today in a climax to 23 hours of savage close-quarter fighting with an estimated 500 Chinese Reds.

The Republic of Korea troops had pulled back from the outpost at midday and let Allied warplanes turn the hill into a smoking mass of bomb craters.

In late afternoon the ROKs counterattacked and forced their way back to the top of the unnamed hill southeast of Kumsong. The Eighth Army briefing officer said the South Koreans counted 30 Chinese dead on the battlefield when the fighting ended just before dark. Another 90 Reds were estimated to have been killed and 60 wounded. That would be a casualty toll of 180—more than one-third of the attack force.

The Reds first hit the outpost shortly after dark yesterday. Their attacks continued through the night, with the Chinese at times clambering up the snow-covered slope and fighting in the Allied bunkers and trenches. The Reds took the eastern half of the hill just before dawn, but the ROK troops smashed back in a tank-supported counter-attack a few hours later. Fresh Chinese troops again pushed the ROKs back a few hundred yards before the Allied planes roared in to support the South Koreans. American fighter-bombers darted through the early morning mist and plastered the attacking Reds with napalm bombs and high explosives. Allied artillery and mortar shells ripped the Red positions.

Allied troops wrested the shell-scarred outpost from the Chinese last winter. It has been the scene of sporadic battles ever since.

The central front fighting was the only major scrap along the battle line. It erupted just before Gen. Mark Clark arrived in Korea from Tokyo for high-level talks with his field commanders and with South Korean President Syngman Rhee.

BONN PARLIAMENT TO VOTE MARCH 19 ON ARMY TREATY

BONN, March 4 (AP)—The West German Parliament will take a final vote on ratification of the European army treaty March 19, it was officially announced today.

West Germany thus became the first of the six nations in the proposed European Defense Community to give the "clear and visible signs" of action on the plan which United States Secretary of State John Foster Dulles demanded on his European tour a month ago.

The Bonn Parliament's steering committee, against the opposition of its Socialist members, fixed March 19 as the date for the third and final reading of the bill to ratify the army treaty and the related German-Allied peace contract.

The Adenauer government indicated it is determined to win ratification regardless of the current legal angle over constitutionality of the pact.

It was evident Chancellor Konrad Adenauer was pushing the issue so he can make his planned visit to President Eisenhower late this month or early April with ratification achieved.

RUSSIA GIVES TOP PRIORITY TO WORK ON U.S. EMBASSY

MOSCOW, March 4 (AP)—Soviet officials have proved friendly and co-operative in rushing work on the new 10-story United States embassy building which will be ready for use this month. They have given the job top priority and have assigned engineers to speed up the work. About 1000 workmen are employed day and night.

The building will have offices and 44 apartments for the embassy staff constructed to American specifications. The rent will be $102,500 a year.

The building was ordered after the Russians canceled the lease on the Embassy's present building, across from the Kremlin. The Russians wanted the old, centrally located building for their own use.

The building includes a garage, laundry, carpentry and electrical repair shops, a commissary selling imported foods, a library and offices of auxiliary services. There is a playground for embassy children.

BAR ON DISPOSAL OF SURPLUS PROPERTY ENDED BY AIR FORCE

WASHINGTON, March 4 (AP)—The Air Force announced the lifting of a 2½-year bar on disposal of millions of dollars worth of surplus equipment ranging "from hairpins to complete aircraft engines."

The disposal of excess material will be renewed as soon as 15 Air Materiel Command depots throughout the United States establish individual "retention levels"—that is, say how much they need to keep.

RENT CONTROL BILL ASSAILED IN MISSOURI HOUSE

75 Attend Hearing, Most of Them From St. Louis — Committee Defers Action.

By a Staff Correspondent of the Post-Dispatch.
 JEFFERSON CITY, March 4.—Opponents of rent control voiced their opinion at length last night at a tumultuous hearing before the House Judiciary Committee on a bill which would provide state rent controls in the event federal controls are allowed to lapse. The meeting was attended by some 75 persons, mostly St. Louis property owners, who were ready and willing to speak in opposition to the measure. About 25 of them were heard, while only one man spoke in support of the bill. No action was taken by the committee on the measure which was laid over for a week to permit the author, Representative Joseph W. Beckerle (Dem.), St. Louis, to appear on it. He was reported ill yesterday.

Bill May Be Killed.
 Some members of the committee, however, expressed the opinion that the bill probably will be killed by the committee.

The lone supporter of the proposed law was Edward M. Todd, a member of the St. Louis area rent board and of the St. Louis CIO Industrial Union Council. He was interrupted frequently by boos and exclamations from the audience, which included many members of the St. Louis Property Owners' League, Inc.

"We still have a critical housing shortage in St. Louis," Todd said. "If this bill is not passed it will be an injustice to many people."

"We have hundreds of complaints about overcharging by landlords every day. Some of these people appearing against this bill have been guilty of overcharging tenants. We object to the landlords gouging their tenants."

Todd expressed the opinion that the housing shortage probably would be relieved by June of 1954, when the proposed rent law would expire. It would not become effective unless the federal controls were ended.

Warns of Restraint of Trade.
 Stephen F. Thomas, attorney for the St. Louis Real Property Owners' League, warned the committee that "any rent control law you might pass would be unconstitutional because it would constitute restraint of trade."

Many of the league members protested vigorously that they are unable to afford the cost of upkeep on their property on the rentals they are allowed to charge. As a result, they said, rental property in St. Louis has depreciated 150 per cent faster in the last 10 years than it did before.

Clarence C. Lang, executive secretary of the St. Louis Real Estate Board, said that during the 11 years the federal rent controls have been in force landlords have been permitted only a 20 per cent increase in rents, while the cost of food has increased 245 per cent and labor costs have jumped 200 per cent.

"Favorable results have been experienced in metropolitan areas where rent controls have been lifted," he said. "The landlords and tenants just seem to get together."

Others Expressing Views.
 Similar views were expressed by Joseph E. Flynn, vice president of the St. Louis Property Owners' organization, who asserted the landlords "have been living in bondage for 11 years."

C. Arch Bay, representing the Springfield (Mo.) Board of Realtors, told the committee that rents there have dropped 100 per cent since the ending of controls.

A small delegation from Kansas City also urged defeat of the rent control bill.

It would extend federal controls under state jurisdiction in areas of the state which have been declared critical or defense areas under the federal law. A similar bill was passed by the state legislature in the 1947 session, but never became operative because of continuation of federal controls.

U.S. COURT OF APPEALS OPENS ITS MARCH TERM
 The seven judges of the United States Court of Appeals for the eighth judicial circuit opened its March term at Federal Building today, with 59 cases on its calendar running through Friday, March 13.

Presiding was Chief Judge Archibald K. Gardner. Other judges present were John B. Sanborn, Joseph W. Woodrugh, Seth Thomas, Harvey M. Johnson, Walter G. Riddick and John Caslake Collet.

Among the appeals to be heard will be that of James P. Finnegan, former St. Louis internal revenue collector, from his district court conviction of misconduct in office and sentence of two years in prison and $10,000 fine. The hearing is set for next Saturday.

DRUG STORE IN NORMANDY ROBBED OF $700 BY 2 MEN
 A Gasen's chain drug store at 7291 Natural Bridge avenue, Normandy, was robbed of about $700 at closing time last night by two armed men who rifled three cash registers and forced the assistant manager, Robert Hill, to open the inside compartment of the store safe.

As the robbers left by the front door, Edward Ostendorf, one of two store clerks, slipped out the back door, hoping to follow them in his automobile. However, the robbers spotted him, forced him back into the store, then escaped.

TIPS ON BUYING JUICE ORANGES

Just about the best—and most economical—way to give your family the Vitamin C they need ("C" can't be stored up—the body needs it daily) is to start them off with a big full glass of orange juice every day. Which means oranges are definitely a "staple" on your grocery list! Here are a few pointers to keep in mind next time you shop:

Don't just look—lift! "Weigh" the oranges in your hands. The heavier the orange, the more juice.

The heaviest oranges have thin skins—more room inside for juice. (Florida growers take special pride in the extra juiciness, the extra-thin skins of Florida fruit.)

Know how much juice you're buying. You get as much juice per pound from small oranges as from large ones: every pound of Florida oranges gives at least seven ounces of juice! Handy tip: buy in a big bag if you shop once a week.

Don't judge ripeness by color. If Florida fruit isn't ripe it hasn't been picked! After careful maturing in Florida sunshine, oranges are picked at the peak of flavor, graded according to size and speeded to you.

Only a greenhorn turns up her nose at the "green" ones! That greenish look you see sometimes is merely an extra burst of chlorophyll, the substance that makes plants green—just before the ripe fruit's picked. They're fully ripe inside—loaded with sweet juice.

Better jot down "Floridas" on your shopping list today! For a free recipe booklet, write Florida Citrus Commission, Dept. 03, Lakeland, Florida.

PLAZA AREA LAND PURCHASES COULD START SEPT. 1

Head of Clearance Agency Says Wrecking Might Begin by Jan. 1 if Voters OK Bonds.

A start on acquiring land for the middle income housing project in the Plaza district could be made by about Sept. 1 if voters approve the $1,500,000 bond issue proposal on the March 13 primary ballot, Leo Havey, chairman of the Land Clearance for Redevelopment Authority, said yesterday.

Havey expressed the opinion that wrecking of some of the buildings in the area from Fifteenth street to Eighteenth street between Market street and an alley south of Olive street could get under way by Jan. 1 if the bond proposal is approved.

Acquisition of the three blocks from Fifteenth to Eighteenth between Market and Chestnut streets for a park to connect Memorial and Aloe Plazas—purpose of the bond issue—is an integral part of the urban redevelopment project.

This park will be credited against the city's one-third share of the land costs for the housing project when the site is sold, at reduced cost, to the St. Louis Urban Redevelopment Corp. This corporation, using private capital, will undertake the actual construction and operation of the project.

Havey based his prediction on a report received by three representatives of the authority who conferred with federal officials in Washington last week. The three reported tentative Government approval of the land use proposed, the location of the project and the character of the city's contribution to the project.

The three representatives were Assistant City Counselor William Murray, Architect George Hellmuth and John B. Boland, executive secretary of the authority.

Appointment of a Citizens' Committee for Extension of Memorial Plaza to work for the proposed bond issue was announced by Havey. It includes 35 civic, labor and political figures.

Two candidates for the Democratic nomination for mayor, Mark D. Eagleton and Raymond R. Tucker, and Carl G. Stifel, one of the two Republican candidates, were included. Havey will be chairman and Mayor Joseph M. Darst honorary chairman.

The bond issue proposal will have a companion proposal to rescind the city's authority to issue $225,000 in bonds which were authorized in 1934 for the Memorial Plaza area but are no longer needed. Thus, if both proposals are adopted, the net increase in debt would be $675,000.

GOV. KENNON SAYS COURT ERRED IN TIDELAND RULING

Challenges Decision for U.S.—Backers of State Control Worried by Brownell's Stand.

By EDWARD A. HARRIS
A Washington Correspondent of the Post-Dispatch.

WASHINGTON, March 4—Members of the United States Supreme Court are fine gentlemen but "just weren't very alert" when they decided, by majority vote, that the coastal states do not have title to offshore submerged lands, according to testimony before the Senate Interior Committee today.

The witness was Gov. Robert F. Kennon of Louisiana, who declared the Supreme Court simply erred in its rulings in favor of federal ownership of the disputed marginal sea. The Justices "did the best they could," he acknowledged, but their best wasn't good enough.

"This issue is going to be settled right in 10 to 15 years," said Gov. Kennon. "I don't know if I'm going to live that long, so I'm hoping it will be settled this year."

Brownell Disturbs Plans. Until this week, it did look as though it would be settled this year, in favor of the coastal states. But Senators from the oil-bearing coastal states who were confident last week are glum today, made so by the testimony Monday of Attorney General Brownell that he does not favor the pending quitclaim legislation.

Another witness, Mastin G. White, former Solicitor of the Department of the Interior, testified that in his opinion former President Truman's executive order creating a naval oil reserve out of the offshore submerged lands was perfectly valid. The Truman action, taken just a few days before the new Republican administration took office, aroused a lively controversy over its legality.

The quitclaim legislation, which would forever renounce federal rights to the oil-rich marginal sea belt, has been supported by most Senators, and twice passed Congress in other years, only to be vetoed by Truman. President Eisenhower, during the recent campaign, promised to sign such a bill if passed.

The new Attorney General, presumably with the full support of the White House, told the committee on Monday that he believes the Federal Government should retain title to the controversial lands, and merely give the adjacent states the right to explore and develop the natural resources beneath them. This, in effect, appeared to federal proponents to be a way of saying: The Federal Government, as the Supreme Court said, does own these lands, but the states may take the oil from them anyway.

not depend on the existence of a statute expressly authorizing him to take such action.

"It is true," said the witness, "that the Midwest Oil Co. case involved public lands, rather than submerged lands of the continental shelf. It can easily be demonstrated, however, that the President's constitutional power over submerged lands of the continental shelf is even greater than his constitutional power over public lands."

"The Supreme Court pointed out in the case of the United States versus California that the submerged lands of the continental shelf were acquired and are held by the United States in furtherance of its international interests and responsibilities. Hence, the management and control of these submerged lands involves important international implications."

He pointed out that the Supreme Court said, in ruling against Texas in the submerged lands issue, that "once low-water mark is passed, the international domain is reached."

White asserted that the President under the Constitution over matters having international aspects is great. This, he said, was brought out forcefully by the Supreme Court in the case of United States versus Curtis Wright Corp., in which the court referred to "the very delicate, plenary and exclusive power of the President as the sole organ of the Federal Government in the field of international relations—a power which does not require as a

Automatic washer makers advise: USE NEW SUDS-FREE "all"

Suds actually proved harmful in automatic washers. Tests show they smother the action of your machine. Use suds-free "all" for truly automatic washing!

Do you know what happens when you use an old-fashioned sudsy detergent or soapy powder in your modern automatic? The suds float on top of the wash water like a smothering blanket. They keep your clothes from moving about freely through the water. They act as a drag on the action of the machine.

Often suds overflow and clog the mechanism. And always some suds remain even after rinsing. They leave a deposit on your clothes that turns yellow under the iron.

What is "all"?

New all was created especially for automatic washers at the request of manufacturers themselves. It has proved so superior to old-style soapy products that it is recommended by every leading maker. Some even pack a box of all in each machine to start new users off right.

New all is practically sudsless. It lets your machine run smooth and easy, the way it was built to run. Clothes slosh around freely, back and forth, up and down. The cleansing waters flow through the fabric dozens of times.

"all" washes everything

What a beautiful wash you get with all! Shirts and sheets, filmy underthings and baby diapers, even grimy work clothes and jeans—they all come out sparkling bright, soft, fluffy, hygienically clean. And with a fresh, sunshiny fragrance that lingers even after you've put them away in cupboards and drawers.

NAVY ASKED WHY ATOM
EXPERT WAS SNUBBED

WASHINGTON, March 4 (AP)—The Senate Armed Services Committee called in three Navy admirals yesterday to explain the failure to promote Capt. Hyman G. Rickover, expert on nuclear-powered submarines. R. Adm. Homer N. Wallin, chief of the Bureau of Ships, praised Rickover's work highly but said that nuclear development in the Navy would continue undiminished whether Rickover was on hand or not. Committee chairman Saltonstall (Rep.), Massachusetts, said the group would hear more from the admirals tomorrow. Some members of Congress who have been critical of the Navy's handling of Rickover also want to be heard Thursday. Two of them, Senator Jackson (Dem.), Washington, and Representative Yates (Dem.), Illinois, sat in on yesterday's session. The 52-year-old Rickover is slated for retirement next June because naval selection boards twice have passed him over for promotion to rear admiral. The Senate group voted last week to go into the matter. Meanwhile, it held up promotions of 39 captains to rear admiral. Wallin and his two associates, R. Adm. J. L. Holloway, chief of navy personnel, and R. Adm. Ira Nunn, navy judge advocate general, testified in closed session yesterday. The committee made public Wallin's statement. Wallin emphasized that "the development of nuclear power for ships is the result of the coordinated efforts of many men." Wallin added that "great credit" is due Rickover. Canadian Population Rises. OTTAWA, March 4 (AP)—Canada's population reached 14,624,000 last Dec. 1, the bureau of statistics reported today. This was a boost of 90,000 in three months.

LAMBERT FIELD HAS $151,576 PROFIT IN YEAR'S OPERATIONS

Lambert-St. Louis Field made a profit of $151,576 in the fiscal year ended last April, it was reported today by the Government Research Institute. Operating expense for the year totaled $166,416 and operating income amounted to $317,992 during the year.

"Evidence that the airport has become of age is the fact that approximately three quarters of a million passengers used it in the fiscal year ended last April," the report said. "There were 196,858 take-offs and landings, and 16,611,000 pounds of express and freight handled."

Take-offs and landings of airplanes has increased from 19,601 in the 1941-42 fiscal year to 72,722 in 1951-52, the report said. Operating income began exceeding expenses before World War II and has shown a steady increasing margin since the war's end. The report pointed out that a substantial portion of the working time of the Director of Public Utilities and some employees of his office is devoted to the airport without a proportionate part of their salaries charged to the airport's operation. A cost accounting system now being set up will take this time into account, the report said, and reflect a more accurate picture of airport operating cost.

HOUSE RULES GROUPS OK'S VA HOSPITALS INQUIRY

WASHINGTON, March 4 (AP)—The House Rules Committee gave its approval yesterday to an inquiry into operation of Veterans' Administration hospitals. The House has yet to act on the authorization.

The House Veterans Affairs Committee would conduct the investigation. Its chairman, Representative Rogers (Rep., Massachusetts) said a thorough inspection of the Veterans' Administration is planned, with particular emphasis on hospitals.

CHARGES TAX MEN PUT PUBLIC GOOD AFTER POLITICS

Head of Inquiry Group Bases Statement on Aid Senators Gave Tydings's Nephew.

WASHINGTON, March 4 (AP)—Representative Kean (Rep., New Jersey), chairman of the House's tax scandals investigating committee, today accused high internal Revenue Bureau officials of "allowing" the public welfare.

Kean made that statement after his Ways and Means subcommittee turned up records showing four Democratic Senators — or their aide — had intervened at one time or another on behalf of Donald Tydings, an alcohol tax official now under committee fire.

Tydings, on leave as an $8700-a-year official of the Revenue Bureau's alcohol tax unit, is a cousin of former United States Senator Millard E. Tydings of Maryland. Others cited as taking an interest in Donald Tydings's affairs were Senator Olin Johnston of South Carolina and Claude Pepper, former Senator from Florida, as well as an aide of Senator John Sparkman of Alabama.

Accused of Deal. Witnesses before Kean's subcommittee accused Donald Tydings of making deals with bootleggers, having "an affair" with an office girl friend and giving contradictory testimony.

Commenting on the record as the subcommittee wound up a two-week inquiry into Tydings's affairs, Kean told Tydings: "It seems that you were untouchable by the bureau owing to your connection with an influential Senator. . . . By the testimony which we have heard in the past week, the bureau certainly stands condemned for allowing political considerations to outweigh the public welfare."

Into the record went voluminous correspondence in which former Senator Tydings solicited favors and help for Donald Tydings.

A letter from Pepper to former Secretary of the Treasury John W. Snyder of St. Louis, dated March 7, 1949, when Donald Tydings was seeking promotion to alcohol tax chief in Atlanta, Ga., said he "seems to be eminently qualified for this responsible position and I hope that you will find it possible to appoint him district supervisor."

Also into the record went a stenographer's record of a telephone call from Ed Hyde, of Sparkman's office, to Carroll Mealey, former deputy revenue commissioner in charge of the liquor tax unit, and himself cited for income tax violations.

Another Agent Mentioned. Hyde was quoted as recalling a previous conversation with adding, "Senator Tydings has just gotten hold of my boss, wanting him to call Snyder on Donald Tydings. Of course, our interest all the way through on this thing was Rodgers (another liquor tax agent), which you have already agreed to take care of." Rodgers was not further identified.

Another telephone report referred to Sparkman as being asked by Senator Tydings to intervene on behalf of his cousin but Sparkman was described as "noncommittal."

Another telephone report quoted Assistant Secretary of the Treasury John S. Graham as telling Mealey: "Furthermore, they had a call Friday from Senator O. D. Johnston who said he was interested in Tydings. So we will probably hear from him, too." Edward Foley was under secretary of the treasury.

Donald Tydings contended that he had never sought the Senator's political backing save on occasions when he was in trouble and once for promotion in 1949. Each promotion, he said, "was a complete surprise to me."

Yesterday the committee delved into records of his purchase of diamonds for his girl friend on a tax agent's salary. It also heard conflicting testimony on his reasons for borrowing $3000 from a bank founded by Tydings's own colleagues in the Atlanta tax office.

Records of Senator Tydings's letters to federal revenue officials went back to 1935, when Donald Tydings was under investigation on charges of accepting bribes to protect bootleggers in Norfolk, Va. The Senator's interest continued until he failed to be re-elected in 1950.

Mum on Some Questions. Donald Tydings underwent rigorous questioning yesterday on his financial affairs. Earlier, Tydings denied having an "affair" with an office employee of the Atlanta office—a woman not named in the testimony.

He also denied knowing that the bank from which he borrowed the $3000 was founded and partly owned by J. C. Garner, described in testimony as "a bootlegger" and "a notorious law violator." Only after he paid off the loan—after being sued—did he learn that Garner had guaranteed the note, Tydings testified.

Under questioning, Tydings related that Garner was investigated for liquor black market dealings, and subsequently was permitted to compromise his civil liability for $3000 under what a Justice Department document called a "tacit understanding" he would not be prosecuted.

Tydings insisted he borrowed the $3000 in April, 1946, to help meet mortgage payments on his late brother-in-law's home in East Orange, N.J.

Committee Counsel John Tobin confronted him with his account ledger from the Bank of Atlanta, where he borrowed the money. The ledger appeared to refute his assertion that he took $2000 of the loan and sent it immediately to his brother-in-law.

Tydings also said he could not explain why he sold Treasury investigators in 1949 that he borrowed the $3000 (1) to reimburse a relative for a loan, and later (2) to buy a new house for himself.

Tobin then read off sales records or sworn statements by Atlanta merchants that:

1. Tydings paid $495 for a woman's dinner ring set with 19 diamonds to Claude S. Bennett, Inc., Atlanta jeweler, less than a week after he made the loan. It was a "little finger ring," he acknowledged.

2. Bought a watch set with six diamonds about the same time. 3. Lent his woman friend $500 to buy a mink fur coat on Christmas 1948, from J. F. Allen Co. of Atlanta. It was a "loan," he said—adding she never repaid it.

The gifts, he conceded, were to a former woman employee of the Atlanta office of the alcohol tax division. "Wasn't the purpose of the loan from the Bank of Atlanta for this purpose?" demanded Tobin. "No, sir," insisted Tydings.

MALAY RED LEADER KILLED IN JUNGLE HEADQUARTERS

KUALA LUMPUR, March 4 (AP)—Malayan police and British troops raided a Communist jungle headquarters yesterday and killed a Malay guerrilla leader. One other guerrilla was killed and six captured.

The dead jungle leader was Lau Cheng, Chinese regimental commander of the Communist "Malayan race's liberation army." A reward of $22,000 (United States) had been offered for Cheng's death until the reward system was abolished last month.

The raid followed an attack Monday when the British high command destroyed the Malacca central district committee of the Malayan Communist party with the killing of the committee's two top members.

HOUNDED PIG SAVED FROM DOGS AFTER CHASE IN COUNTY

A fleet and squealing pig was rescued from a pack of pursuing dogs yesterday in St. Louis county by a Humane Society officer who responded to calls from worried residents.

The 40-pound, black and white pig led the yapping dogs a winding chase through lawns and shrubbery near the intersection of United States Highway 66 and Lindbergh boulevard.

Finally, the exhausted pig was cornered in a garage on Monica drive and Thomas Miller, officer with the Animal Protective Association, arrived just in time to prevent it from being converted into pork chops by the dogs.

The pig—unharmed—is at the animal shelter, 1705 South Hanley road, awaiting its owner, and the Monica drive neighborhood was considerably quieter.

HALF OF WORK RESUMED AT PLANT AFTER STRIKE

Operations have returned to 50 per cent of normal at the National Bearing Division of the American Brake Shoe Co., 4830 Manchester avenue, following settlement of a 10-month strike by members of the AFL International Association of Machinists, District 9, a company spokesman said today.

He said letters recalling union members to work have been sent to half of the 104 who were on strike. Others will be called back "as business warrants," he said.

Terms of a settlement ending the strike included a wage increase of 16 to 25 cents per hour, a third week's vacation after 15 years of service, and the addition of Armistice day as a seventh paid holiday.

SENATOR INVITES TWO UNIONS TO TALKS IN AUDITORIUM ROW

Special to the Post-Dispatch. JEFFERSON CITY, March 4.—State Senator Albert M. Spradling, Cape Girardeau, today asked officials of two unions whose jurisdictional dispute is threatening further cancellation of programs at Kiel Auditorium to come to Jefferson City next week for discussions aimed at settling the difficulties.

Spradling introduced a resolution Monday calling for appointment of a five-man committee to investigate the dispute between the electrical workers' and stagehands' unions, both of the AFL, because additional cancellation of events at the auditorium "would injure innocent parties." Appointment of the committee is being held up pending the anticipated conference next week between Senate leaders and officials of the unions.

How many people now own Life Insurance?

Over 88 million in the United States—23 million more than in 1940!

Today, more Americans than ever before are using life insurance to provide for the financial security of their families and themselves.

Three out of every four families now own life insurance.

Almost as many women as men are policyowners!

Life insurance is owned by people in every walk of life. 9 out of 10 families headed by business executives own it. 8 out of 10 clerical workers. 8 out of 10 professional people. 7 out of 10 farmers. 8 out of 10 skilled workers. Even 6 out of 10 retired persons!

In thousands of cases, life insurance is the main resource of the family. It has kept families together, providing their food, clothing and shelter.

To many families, it has assured an education for their children. To others, a home free and clear of a mortgage, or a retirement income in old age.

The widespread ownership of life insurance clearly shows the desire of 88 million Americans to help provide on their own for the security of their families and themselves.

RED CROSS FLOWER STARTS GIRL ON ROAD TO RECOVERY

A flower presented by a voluntary Red Cross worker to a 17-year-old girl suffering from mental illness marked the first step toward her recovery, it was reported in a case record prepared for use during the current fund drive.

Nervous and depressed, the girl, a patient at Malcolm Bliss Hospital, was brought to attend a flower arranging class and recreational program sponsored by the Entertainment and Instruction Service of the Red Cross. The worker brushed her hair back and put a flower in it—and the girl responded for the first time since she entered the hospital six months before.

She began to take pride in her appearance and pressed her dress, brushed her hair and polished her nails for programs held in following weeks.

UNIT CONTROL BILL REVIVED, PUT ON HOUSE CALENDAR

Sponsors Put Off New Test Because of Apparent Lack of 79 Votes Necessary for Passage.

By EDWARD H. THORNTON
A Staff Correspondent of the Post-Dispatch.

JEFFERSON CITY, March 4—Sponsors of the bill to provide unit control for the St. Louis public school system yesterday succeeded in placing the measure back on the House calendar, but made no second attempt to seek passage of it because of an apparent lack of supporting votes.

When the roll call on reconsideration showed only 69 affirmative votes against 48 opposing, Representative Francis M. O'Brien (Rep.), St. Louis, who introduced the measure, immediately put the bill on the informal calendar.

He explained later that he feared, if he asked for immediate passage, the bill would receive no more than 77 affirmative votes, only two more than it had last week when it failed of passage because it lacked the necessary 79 affirmative votes.

Controversial Measure.
The measure, recommended by the St. Louis Board of Education, would make the superintendent of instruction responsible for all operations in the school system. He now has control only of the educational functions while the commissioner of school buildings is charged with responsibility for construction and maintenance of school buildings.

Meanwhile, the House Committee on Education, which had scheduled a hearing for last night on a bill which would freeze custodial and other employees of the board of education, exclusive of educators, in their jobs laid the measure over until next week.

It was explained that several persons who wished to appear in connection with the bill were unable to do so last night.

Bill by S. Walshes.
The bill was introduced by Representatives Thomas A. Jennie and Eugene P. Walsh, three St. Louis Democrats, with the announced intention of extending the same job tenure protection provided teachers to other employees of the board of education.

However, it actually would go much farther. The board is permitted to reduce the number of teachers if there are insufficient funds, or a drop in pupil enrollment warrants it. Under the Walshes' bill, the board would be prohibited from reducing the number of "other employees" under similar circumstances.

Mrs. Walsh has prepared amendments to correct this and plans to submit them to the committee when it considers the measure.

The education committee reported favorably a bill which would provide payment of state funds to school districts for transportation of school children at the rate of 3 cents a mile per pupil. The present law allows a $3-a-month state contribution for each child given transportation.

ALERT PILOT SAVES 83 ON AIRLINER AS LANDING GEAR FAILS

CHICAGO, March 4 (AP)—A fast-thinking Eastern Air Lines pilot averted possible disaster late yesterday when he deliberately spun his Super Constellation carrying 83 persons off a runway after its nose landing gear collapsed.

The plane, which had just landed at Midway Airport after a nonstop flight from Miami, nosed into the muddy field, shaking up the passengers and crew. One passenger, Joseph J. Ziehs of Chicago, suffered a slight cut on his foot. The others escaped uninjured.

Airline spokesmen said Capt. W. D. Brach of Miami pulled off the runway because he was fearful that sparks from friction with the concrete might ignite the plane's fuel.

The four-engine craft made a normal landing and was near the end of its run when the gear collapsed, dropping the nose of the plane to the runway. The undercarriage was damaged, but the plane remained upright.

EAST SIDE MAN GETS 99 YEARS ON CHARGE OF ATTACKING GIRL

Richard L. Stanton, carpenter of 901 North Eighty-third street, East St. Louis, yesterday was sentenced to 99 years in prison after he was found guilty of criminal assault by a jury in the court of Circuit Judge Ed. Ford F. Barels at Belleville.

The jury of seven men and five women deliberated 80 minutes. Stanton was identified by two sisters, 12 and 8 years old, as the man who picked them up at an East Side church last Nov. 23, took them to a secluded spot and attacked the older girl.

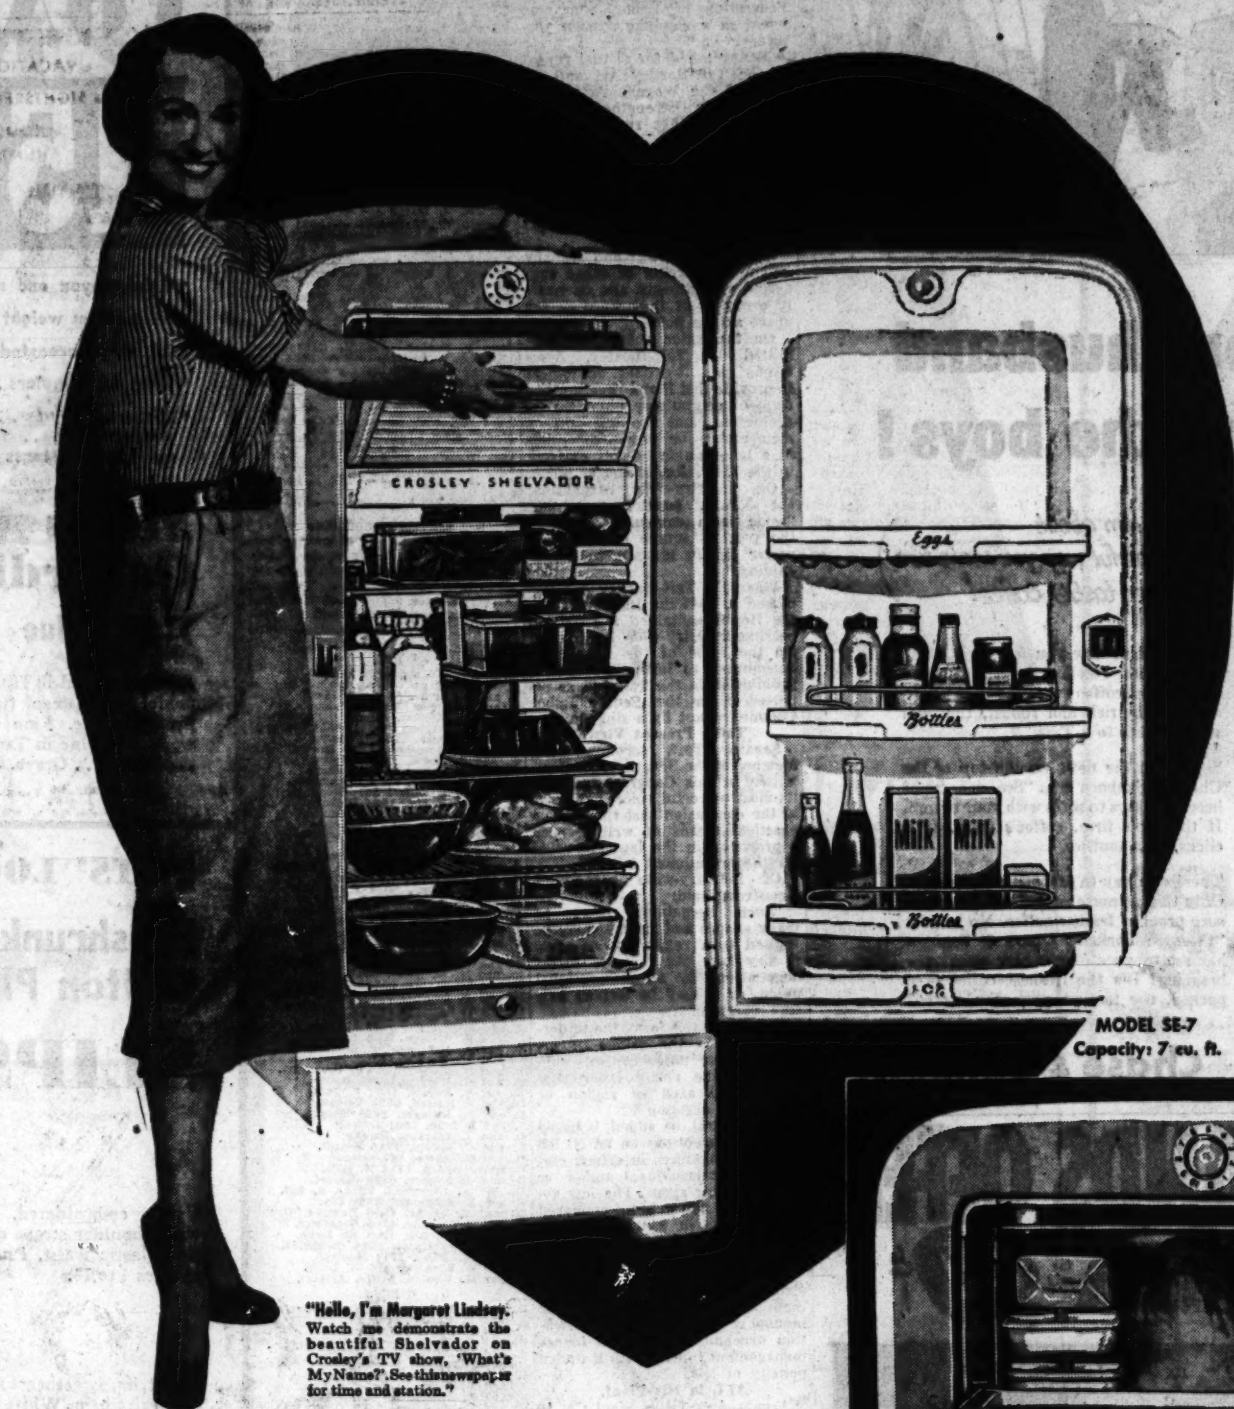

Stanton denied the charge although he admitted signing a statement in which he admitted it. He said he signed the statement after he had been threatened and promises had been made him.

DICK POWELL REMAINS ILL

SANT AMONICA, Calif., March 4 (AP)—Movie actor Dick Powell is recuperating in St. John's Hospital after two operations, but his condition is still serious. Powell, portrayed of detective roles and at one time a top singer in films, suffered a ruptured appendix and was operated on. Complications followed the appendectomy and further surgery became necessary. His wife, actress June Allyson, has been in almost constant attendance at his bedside.

Soviet Empire Expected to Split Off Around Edges Before It Rots At Its Center in the Kremlin

Internal Uprisings Held Unlikely, Only Scattered Bands Oppose Red Rule — Albania Considered Best Prospect to Shake Off Communist Yoke.

NOTE—The writer of the following article has had wide experience as a foreign correspondent, serving in Asia, the Middle East and Europe, on the edge of the Soviet empire, as well as in Russia itself.

By GEORGE WELLER

WILL the empire of Stalin rot at its center in the Kremlin or from its extremities in the satellites? That was the question being asked from the Baltic to the Sea of Japan today. And the general answer came: The Soviet empire will probably split off around the edges before it rots at the center.

The West is caught unprepared, contact with the Albanian underground.

The Soviets cannot reinforce Albania with quick troops, the only satellite in this condition, and are cut off at sea by the allied Mediterranean fleet.

But Italy, Greece and Yugoslavia have not settled into the control of the future Albania and there are at least three expatriate "governments."

The next likeliest theater for a walkout is Bulgaria, also not occupied by Soviet troops. Here an uprising among the collectivized farmers is possible, and there are still hiding places in the mountains. But a quick march by Soviet troops from Romania and landings by Russian troops on the Black Sea port of Stalin, formerly Varna, are likely.

Poland is in many ways the most promising theater for trouble for the Soviets. The Red Army's trains cross Poland en route to the German front, but they are sometimes wrecked. Collectivism has not gone far in Poland, but the farmers know it is coming, and are ready to fight against it, not flee like the East Germans.

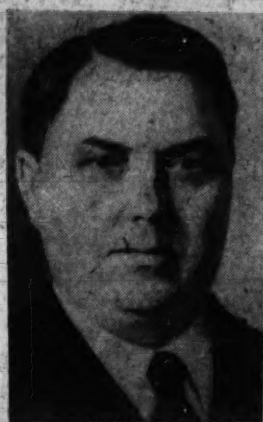

Stalin's death might save immediately the farms of Poland. With the Catholic church as the cradle for resistance, and a tough, numerous people, stiff passive sabotage may break out here.

Slovakia, the eastern part of Czechoslovakia, disillusioned by the Red hanging of the Slovak ex-foreign minister, Vladimir Clementis, is the most promising part of the East for a rising. Here are tough men, a resistant Catholicism, and mountains to hide in.

The slowest satellites to revolt are expected to be Hungary and Rumania, heavily occupied by Soviet "communication troops" tied to the Soviet army divisions on the eastern front. These governments are mere shells, but they are upheld directly on Soviet bayonets. Red Germany, keystone of the Soviet front, must be held like a Stalingrad.

The best prospect for a quick dent in the Soviet empire is Albania, already cut off by the defection of Tito's Yugoslavia. Western intelligence plans have frequently soared over Albania's mountains, and there is evident

V. M. MOLOTOV

Party Secretary Is Regarded as Top Man — British Expert Backs Him 'on a Long-Term Basis.'

By MILTON L. KAPLAN

LONDON, March 4 (INS).

BURLY, unsmiling Soviet Communist Party Secretary, Georgi Malenkov, loomed today as a possible heir to the throne of the stricken Premier Stalin.

The other two high Russian leaders mentioned for the post are Deputy Premier and former Foreign Minister V. M. Molotov and Security Chief Lavrenti P. Beria.

Malenkov is 48 years old. Beria is 51 and Molotov is 60. The Foreign Office refused to speculate officially on Stalin's possible successor but unofficial opinion in Whitehall favors Malenkov.

One top British expert on Russia, Fitzroy Maclean, said that when Stalin dies a struggle for power might be touched off. But he frankly admitted that there was no way to tell, the transition might be smooth.

He regarded Molotov as the immediate successor to Stalin, barring a triumvirate, but he also put Malenkov and Beria "in the running."

The 41-year-old former British diplomat, who also was head of the wartime military mission to Marshal Tito's partisan forces in Yugoslavia, said:

"On a long-term basis I would back Malenkov because he has control of the party machinery. Looking at it from a long-range point of view I don't think the (Western Allies) will be any better off with Stalin gone. A successor might be a good deal less cautious."

Malenkov's rise to power was rapid. By 1924 he was secretary of the Komsomol, the Soviet youth organization. He next worked for the Communist party's Central Committee and then became Stalin's private secretary. After Hitler invaded Russia, Stalin appointed Malenkov to Russia's five-man Supreme War Cabinet, where his driving energy made him one of the architects of victory. He emerged as a likely successor to Stalin when he was tapped to deliver the opening speech at last fall's big Russian Communist party congress.

Lavrenti Pavlovich Beria—Russia's super-policeman, with supervision over the dread state secret police, and atomic development as well.

Among a group of leaders obsessed with silence and security, he is the mystery of mysteries. Not until 1938—when Stalin called him up from his post as Communist party secretary in the Georgian republic to head the NKVD—the secret police—was his name mentioned prominently among Russia's leaders.

Broad-shouldered Beria's high, balding forehead and nose glasses give him the appearance of a middle-aged, small-time manufacturer or business man. Like Stalin, a Georgian, Beria was born at Merkheuli, a small village. During World War II, his tasks as

'Voice' Silent On Inquiry Into Its Operations

Single Broadcast to Reich Only Mention of McCarthy Investigation.

By PETER LISAGOR

The Chicago Daily News-Post-Dispatch Special Dispatch, Copyright 1953. WASHINGTON, March 4.

THE Voice of America is not broadcasting about Senator McCarthy's investigation into its operations.

Except for a short broadcast to Germany, the VOA has been mum about its difficulties before a Senate committee, it is learned here.

The policy adviser of the State Department's international broadcasting service in New York, Edwin Kretzman, decided nothing could be gained by advertising the VOA's trials abroad, informants said.

Officials here added that the Voice has a policy of talking about itself as little as possible. Moreover, they observed, the Senate investigations have no propaganda value behind the Iron Curtain.

The sole broadcast to Germany was based on a statement of Secretary of State Dulles that while the Voice would continue to be made in the State Department, officials would co-operate with Congress, which has broad powers of investigation.

The broadcast pointed out that investigations of Government agencies was an established practice of a free government like the United States, an official said.

Some officials are understood to feel that the Voice should carry some accounts of the inquiry to enhance the "credibility" of VOA.

They have noted that press service in the free countries would report the Senate hearings, and some people might be silent about them as past policy of the Voice has been to broadcast major news stories in the United States objectively.

Explaining why nothing could be gained from broadcasting the charges of waste and subversive influences in VOA operations, officials said reactions to the newspaper accounts abroad were generally "bad," tending to "discredit" the Voice to the glowing satisfaction of the Communists.

ALSO Disorders in Iran Only One Part Of a Broad Pattern of Danger Confronting Entire Middle East

Arab-Israeli Dispute Grows More Inflamed — Anti-American Feeling Spreads — Need for Positive U. S.-British Policy Faces Dulles and Eden.

By JAMES and STEWART ALSOP

(Copyright, 1953.)

WASHINGTON.

MAYBE it is just as well that the perpetual crisis in Iran entered one of its incandescent stages at this time. This week, Secretary of State John Foster Dulles and British Foreign Secretary Anthony Eden can talk the problem over face to face directly, frankly and without the obstacles created by cable communications. Under the whirl of necessity, they may even agree, at long last, on a positive, common policy in the Middle East.

The need is certainly dire. The drama at Tehran is only one part of a broad and terrifying pattern, in which the other parts are also close to incandescence.

In recent weeks, the American ambassadors throughout the Middle East, and especially in the Arab countries, have begun to take a tone of downright despair in their messages to the State Department. The Arab-Israeli dispute has dragged on too long. Anti-American feeling has grown more and more inflamed. The new anti-Semitism of the Kremlin has greatly increased the inflammation.

Immediate Dangers.

There are grave immediate dangers. For instance, if the Kremlin chooses to send arms to Col. Shishakly, the dictator of Syria, the sequel may easily be another outbreak of large-scale fighting between Arabs and Israelis. (The border war goes on interminably, like a low fever.) Or the Russians can arm the Iraqi dissidents. Or there can be some other sort of irreparable breakdown or governmental crisis. This could happen even in Egypt, which is the only place where the trend of events is at all hopeful.

In this somber picture, Iran has a double importance. One of the causes of the troubles that overtook the aging Premier Mossadeq over the weekend is a division of power over the army and police. The Shah of Iran formerly controlled both police and army. Mossadeq has been seeking to wrest this control from him. The process is only half completed. With the forces of law and order thus distracted and divided, there is an obvious opportunity for the Communist Tudeh party. The Government of Iran is now such a ramshackle structure that it may fall apart at any time.

No wonder, then, that the Shah declared he would leave his country, rather than submit. Unfortunately for Mossadeq, the Shah is genuinely popular, while Mossadeq himself has been lately losing ground, especially among the powerful merchant class whose business is not helped by Iran's present condition of endemic bankruptcy. Kashani raised his head again, and got out the street mobs on the Shah's behalf. So the trouble began. Where it may end, it would be ridiculous to try to predict at this distance.

Strong Civil Defense Can Deter World War III, Eisenhower Says

WASHINGTON, March 4 (AP). PRESIDENT EISENHOWER said today the American people can reduce the chances of a third world war by building a strong and vigilant civil defense organization.

He made the statement at the White House swearing in of Val Peterson, former Governor of Nebraska, as federal civil defense administrator.

The President said the job of civil defense is vital to national security and "means developing a preparedness, a vigilance, so impressive as to deter aggression itself."

Then in a series of impromptu remarks after issuing a formal statement, Eisenhower said he believes this country can "awaken to the task" of preparing for the effects of possible conflict. To the extent that they do so, he said, "the chances of conflict will be lessened."

The President said one major function of the civil defense organization must be to provide a flow of information to the public "as to the seriousness of the situation" in which the country finds itself.

In this national program, Eisenhower said, is an opportunity for Americans to aid the country's security "without crying wolf and without threatening anyone."

Peterson said in a statement that adequate civil defense requires an investment of little money and little effort in contrast to the rest of America's defense program.

"We cannot, however, hope to win the cold war on purely World War III as a nation unless we have a sound civil defense program in being."

Peterson takes charge of an agency which now has some 900 employees in Washington and in nine regional offices. Ex-Gov. Millard Caldwell of Florida resigned as the agency's director last Nov. 15, and the acting director since then has been James J. Wadsworth, recently named a member of the United States delegation to the United Nations.

Peterson has been a White House assistant for several weeks. He was reported to have been in line at one time for appointment as Ambassador to India, but two of his political foes, Republican Senators Hugh Butler and Dwight Griswold of Nebraska, blocked his nomination before it was presented to the Senate. They approved him for the civil defense post.

GUESTS TO WAIT IN ABBEY 4 HOURS FOR CORONATION

LONDON, March 4 (AP)—The Duke of Edinburgh will sit in a special chair of state to the right of the throne when his wife is crowned Queen Elizabeth II next June 2.

The 7000 persons who will get into Westminster Abbey for the ceremony must be in their places by 8:30 a.m., four hours before the crowning takes place, and probably will have to smuggle in sandwiches under their crinoline and velvet if they want an early lunch.

The procession back from the Abbey to Buckingham Palace will be precisely five miles and 270 yards long, with 31,000 troops and 48 bands and not a motor vehicle in the lot.

These were among the things brought out yesterday at a press conference of the Earl Marshal, the Duke of Norfolk, who is in charge of the coronation ceremony.

PROVOO RESENTENCED, FINE OF $10,000 ADDED TO TERM

NEW YORK, March 4 (UP)—A United States district court judge resentenced convicted traitor John David Provo to add to his life imprisonment a fine of $10,000 inadvertently omitted at his original sentencing.

An attorney for Provo, convicted of treason as a Japanese prisoner in World War II, charged that Judge Gregory F. Noonan's action was "improper" since an appeal to set aside the conviction already had been filed.

Provo, brought to court for the resentencing from the Federal House of Detention here, stood mute, with head bowed, during the brief proceeding. A federal jury convicted him Feb. 17 of giving aid and comfort to the enemy after the fall of Corregidor.

WESTERN OPINION FOCUSES ON THREE

By the Associated Press.

Western speculation on Stalin's successor centered today on three men, all Deputy Prime Ministers. They are:

Georgi Maximilianovich Malenkov—A secretary of the Soviet Communist party.

A dark, stocky man who hates the West, he has been built up by Stalin over the years to become one of the super-architects of the new Soviet world. Born in Orenburg, a town in the Cossack country southwest of the Urals, he joined the Red Army in 1919 as a propaganda official and rose rapidly. By 1924 he was secretary of the Komsomol, the Soviet youth organization. He next worked for the Communist party's Central

I know that my retirement will make no difference in its cardinal principles; that it will always fight for progress and reform, never tolerate injustice or corruption, always fight demagogues of all parties, never belong to any party, always oppose privileged classes and public plunderers, never lack sympathy with the poor, always remain devoted to the public welfare; never be satisfied with merely printing news; always be drastically independent; never be afraid to attack wrong, whether by predatory plutocracy or predatory poverty.

LETTERS FROM THE PEOPLE

The name and address of the writer must accompany every letter, but on request will not be published. Letters not exceeding 200 words receive preference.

The Price of Liberty

To the Editor of the Post-Dispatch:
Your Sunday editorial "To Protect Us All," is a much needed reminder to all Americans that our rights and liberties can never be taken as established, but are always in danger and always require defense. At few times in the past has the danger been greater than it is today.

The Ford Foundation's $15,000,000 fund will focus attention upon the menace to the Bill of Rights presented by current congressional investigations, as indeed Messrs. McCarthy, Jenner and Velde will themselves do.

But of equal importance are the United States Supreme Court decisions to which you refer particularly to the progressive whittling down, inch by inch, of the right of habeas corpus, carried one step farther by Brown vs. Allen, in which the court agreed to a serious limitation on the right of a person to question the legality of his arrest and to require justification for his detention.

Eternal vigilance is still the price of liberty. A constant struggle is required, not to expand our liberties but simply to maintain them against the constant pressure of government.

The Post-Dispatch performs a high and patriotic service when it alerts us to the danger of creeping fascism.

Comfort on the Links

To the Editor of the Post-Dispatch:
It is comforting to see that Senator Taft isn't attempting to call the President's shots on the golf course.

Alton. BERNARD H. FAHRIG.

No More Five Percenters

To the Editor of the Post-Dispatch:
While Republicans may occasionally need criticism, you shouldn't snipe at their attempts to fulfill their campaign promises. This is especially true since they have had to admit they were in error about taxes and the budget, about the source of aid and panacea for the Korean war, and about foreign aid and treaty repudiation, to mention a few.

However, the Republican party does have a clear and unmistakable mandate from the people to reward initiative and to run the 5-percenters out of Washington. From now on a top-caliber man with initiative, foresight and the right connections can aspire to higher things—10, 15, perhaps even 25 per cent.

And Mr. Roberts is clearly a man to watch. Selling people, even Kansans, their own property is a marvelous, awe-inspiring demonstration of initiative. Soon he'll learn about the subtle angles—like the gold brick and the Brooklyn bridge—and then his success will surely know no bounds.

FLOYD H. MAIN.

Viewing Senator McCarthy

To the Editor of the Post-Dispatch:
Adlai said he wanted to talk sense to the American people. I think the American people had more sense than he thought they had. Senator McCarthy's landslide vote proved he did talk sense to the American people who are for him. We need more up there like him.

S. W. PEEL.
Clayton.

To the Editor of the Post-Dispatch:
This letter is a vote for more broadcasts (and possible telecasts) of hearings of Senator McCarthy's subcommittee and for your continuous stand against "McCarthyism."

JUST PLAIN MAD.

On the Level?

To the Editor of the Post-Dispatch:
It seems to a rural level reader that the writers of the nation are vying with each other to see how often they can strain a point to use the word "level."

Last week the following examples appeared in newspaper items: "Prestigious pattern level, office on fourth-floor level, top-level executives, middle-level income group, flood control level, state level employment security, deposits reach new level, adjusts to any grade level, a $25,000-a-year bracket level, age levels, normal gas price levels, beef supplies for 120-day-level." Phooie on that gobbledygook!

Fulton, Mo. B. W.

The Other Side

To the Editor of the Post-Dispatch:
As to your reports of ex-convicts in a certain union in St. Louis: Has it ever occurred to you that an ex-convict grabs at any job he can get? If he is in good at all he doesn't want to go back to prison. Yet how difficult it is for him to get a job when he gets out.

Look at Skid Row. Many of those men had numbers and could not get work, so what could they do? I have a husband in prison. He was given 15 years for a $25 theft. He is up for parole now and they say he must get himself a job before he can be paroled. How can he get a job and who will hire him when he writes from a prison address? Did you ever think of the convict's side?

My husband is in Walla Walla Prison, Washington. His number is 22691. I am 50 years old, hard of hearing and have had a stroke and I need him at home. He has paid his debt and ought to be permitted to live without having his past forever thrown up before him.

An Appointment to Reject

Turn over the Interstate Commerce Commission to the railroads? The Federal Power Commission to the natural gas and electric utilities? The Federal Trade Commission to the advertising business? The Securities and Exchange Commission to the stock brokers?

All of these questions are involved in the presidential nomination of Albert M. Cole as administrator of the Housing and Home Finance Agency. Because they are so involved, we believe Mr. Cole's appointment should be rejected by the Senate.

As a Congressman from Kansas, Mr. Cole fought side by side with the real estate lobby against housing legislation of all kinds. If he is now placed in charge of all federal housing programs, then it would be just as sensible to turn over other federal agencies to the special interests they are supposed to regulate.

Mr. Cole promised the Senate Banking Committee that if confirmed as housing administrator he would not "try to circumvent, scuttle or sink a law that Congress has placed on the books." But if his opposition to housing legislation was honest in the first place, he cannot be expected to become converted overnight to basic principles which he has consistently opposed.

Imagine for a moment that Mr. Cole had been re-elected to Congress last November, instead of being defeated. Would he now be embracing the housing legislation which he so vigorously opposed in the past? And if he could not make that switch as a Congressman, how could he be expected to make it as an appointed official?

The issue is not, in any case, Mr. Cole's present frame of mind. The issue is his record, and that is quite clear.

The record shows that Mr. Cole was the acknowledged House leader of the fight against the Housing Act of 1949, which set up the public housing and slum clearance programs he would direct as HHA administrator. He carried on this fight in committee, on the floor, in the newspapers, on national radio hookups.

The record shows that at the time he was leading this fight, Mr. Cole was on first-name terms with Morton Bodfish, Chicago mortgage banker and one of the leaders of the real estate lobby. Mr. Bodfish fed Mr. Cole material for his fight on housing.

The record shows that Mr. Cole opposed rent control in 1949, in 1950 and in 1952. It shows that he stood shoulder to shoulder with the real estate lobby in its attempt first to weaken and then to kill the Defense Housing Act of 1951. It shows that he even tried to eliminate from that law Government powers designed to prevent land speculators from squeezing the builders and buyers of defense housing.

Seldom has any Congressman compiled so clear a record of serving a special interest rather than the public interest. Mr. Cole's appointment was an unfortunate mistake, and the Senate will do the Eisenhower Administration no favor by ratifying the mistake.

It would be a service to the President, in fact, if the Senate rejected this nomination as a warning to the White House staff. Self-serving groups are bound to take advantage of the President's political inexperience and his preoccupation with high-level policy if they get the chance. A firm No to the real estate lobby now would save the Administration countless embarrassments from other lobbies later on.

Report From Employers

Impressive community support for a state fair employment practices law has been registered by St. Louisans with the State Legislature. At a recent Senate Judiciary Committee hearing, Senator Pentland's bill was endorsed by representatives of Archbishop Joseph E. Ritter, the Council of Jewish Women, the Metropolitan Church Federation, the Young Women's Christian Association, and Local 688 of the AFL Teamsters' Union.

Missing from this list, most obviously, was any representative of the St. Louis business community, which would be directly affected by a fair employment law.

Under the cartoon on this page we publish today excerpts from a report to Congress on state fair employment laws. According to this report, many employers who originally opposed the adoption of an FEP law in their states now believe that the law has not prevented them from hiring the most competent employees available, and in fact has had positive beneficial effects. It is also reported that fair employment practices were put into effect without difficulty.

This impressive evidence of actual experience in other states should be taken into account by the legislators as they consider an FEP law.

Good Riddance

Gov. Donnelly's request for the resignation of the three remaining members of the Forrest Smith Board of Election Commissioners will provoke not the slightest whisper of protest. This board of four—Democrats Paul C. Calcaterra and Leo J. Hennessey, and Republicans Clifford G. Haley (who withdrew to enter a surprise last-minute candidacy for Mayor) and Sigmund M. Bass—took it upon itself to "gerrymander" St. Louis's state senatorial districts out of all semblance of reason. They did it solely to defeat Senator Michael Kinney last year. That obstacle to machine politics will always blot the Calcaterra-Hennessey-Bass-Haley record. The sooner a new board takes their place the better.

Coming in like a lion is one thing, but arriving with all the variations of Mr. Viergeher's menagerie is going a bit too far.

A Boost for Inflation?

The Federal Reserve Board has taken its first major step in the control of credit since the advent of the Eisenhower Administration. This step is to lower margin requirements on stock share purchases and short sales from 75 per cent to 50 per cent.

What this means is that the person who wants to use credit in stock market purchases can buy $100 worth of stock by putting up only $50. Prior to this lowering of the credit requirement, the stock speculator had to put up $75 for each $100 purchase.

Presumably the Federal Reserve Board feels that it can take this step without adding to the inflationary pressure. Inevitably, however, there will now be much more speculative buying than before the change in the requirement. This will tend to inflate the stock market whether or not it inflates living costs generally.

The margin requirement was reduced from 75 to 50 per cent on March 30, 1949. The next day the volume of stock sales more than doubled. The jump was from 700,000 sales the day before, to 1,800,000 and the Dow Jones industrial averages rose 2.4 points. After the Korean war came on the margin requirement was put back up to 75 per cent as a credit control move.

Time will tell whether the new reduction is sound. Meantime those who are looking for easy stock gains in a rising market will be able to buy more shares for less money.

Tragedy of Iran

The riotous demonstrations in Tehran, the decision of the young Shah to stay with his people, the flight of Premier Mossadegh in pajamas, the Premier's apparent return to power in Parliament, and then the boycott ordered against Parliament by the political-religious leader Khashani—all this might be material for a very lively Gilbert and Sullivan extravaganza did it not involve such serious stakes.

One of these important considerations is the welfare of the Iranian people, misled as they are by emotional, nationalist politicians. Another is the continued independence of Iran from Russian domination, and the importance of that independence to the Western alliance.

The background for both is Iran's oil. Without the money to be gained by the sale of that oil there is little hope for a stable government in Iran and for improvement of the lot of its people. That oil also makes Iran most attractive to the Soviet expansionists. And it is vital to the West that Iran and its oil should not be taken over by the Communists either by direct aggression or—as is more likely—through the internal machinations of the Russian-dominated Tudeh party.

When the current demonstrations first broke out, they seemed to betoken new authority for the Shah, a man who showed his good intentions toward his people by breaking up his own land holdings, and a man who might be expected to take a more reasonable attitude in the negotiations for a settlement of the British-Iranian oil dispute. Hope for such a move toward stability has been clouded by the subsequent demonstrations inspired by Mossadegh and Khashani.

In such an irrational situation it is, of course, very difficult for Western diplomats to have much effect. The British have offered various concessions in connection with their Iranian oil claims. United States representatives have offered what to the Iranians might be even easier ways out of the costly deadlock. But shifting street demonstrations have brought sensible statesmanship almost to a standstill.

The tragedy is that the hardest-hit victims of an Iranian debacle, especially overt or indirect Communist domination of the country, would be the very people who are now allowing themselves to be led into blind demonstrations by reckless leaders.

The Great Piano Mystery

The case of the misplaced and rediscovered piano in the White House seems a perfect model of how to go about this sort of incident. It cannot, in fact, be too much admired. Consider: It was last Saturday the Cincinnati Times-Star announced that a nine-foot grand piano which had cost $10,000 (or a little over $1000 a foot) was missing. The President's press secretary, James C. Hagerty, said it was as much a mystery to him as it was to the Times-Star.

Three days elapsed before Mr. Hagerty announced the lost piano had been found. It had been moved from one room to another on a different floor, a development apparently not anticipated by the Times-Star. During those three days he pointed out, as an interesting piece of circumstantial evidence, that former President Truman plays the piano. No one indulged in smear-by-association to remark on the fact that Miss Margaret Truman is often accompanied by a piano.

There were no charges, counter-charges, investigations, or even demands for investigations. The piano was lost, looked for, and found on the next floor; and that was absolutely that. Could anyone do it better?

Troubles of Pacification

"We do not like the way you broke that contract, and we reserve the right to break it ourselves."

That seems to be the substance of the anti-environmental resolution as now amended, on Senator Taft's orders, by the Senate Foreign Relations Committee. Valiantly laboring to pacify those Republican extremists who considered the Administration's original resolution "soft" because it did not repudiate Yalta and other wartime agreements, the Committee has added a paragraph.

The pacifier insert does not repudiate the wartime agreements. But it leaves the door open for possible repudiation in the future by stating, in effect, that Congress has not made up its mind whether the agreements are valid or not.

Republican Senators have shown their solidarity with Taft by unanimously endorsing the amendment. But the very change which brought them into line has alienated many Democrats, whose votes are necessary if the resolution is to receive that "substantial unanimity" which Secretary Dulles has described as essential.

Six of seven Democrats on the Foreign Relations Committee opposed the amendment. As the fight moves to the floor, President Eisenhower finds himself being supported by the minority and compelled to choose between fighting his own party or knuckling under to Senator Taft.

The Democrats make the rather telling point that Congress cannot very well denounce Russia for breaking the wartime pacts unless Congress considers the pacts binding. To raise an open doubt about their validity tends to reduce the force of a proclamation that the Russians have "perverted" the pacts to enslave the peoples of their puppet states.

So what started out as a bold stroke in Secretary Dulles's psychological offensive appears to be pretty well entangled at the moment. A resolution supported by the Republicans and opposed by the Democrats would be something less than bold. So would a resolution supported by the Democrats but opposed by Senator Taft and the right-wing Republicans.

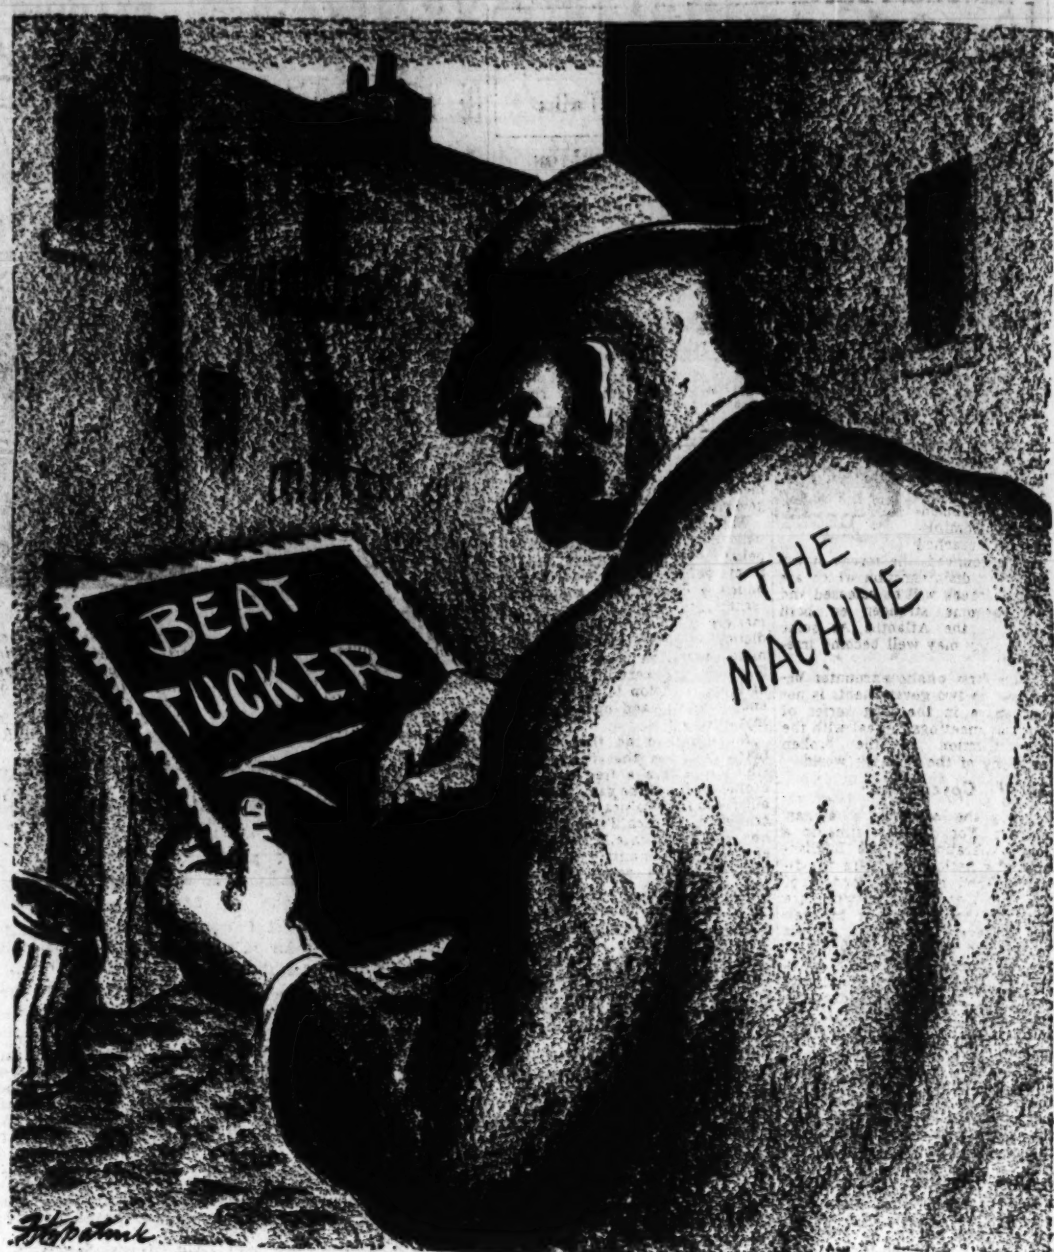

We would not be surprised if Mr. Dulles is wishing now that he had never brought the subject up in the first place.

Doctor, Lawyer, Indian Chief . . .

Sometimes the mayoral campaign wanders off into the wild blue yonder, as in the occupational and professional dispute going on between the rival Democratic candidates.

This began when Ray Tucker, an engineer, argued that the public ought to hire an engineer as Mayor these days, and not some specialist in a limited field ("a doctor, a lawyer, an accountant or salesman"). Hastening to defend these professions, Mark Eagleton, a lawyer, retorted that it was F.D.R., another lawyer, "who pulled this country out of the mire after an engineer had failed."

Before anybody replies that George Washington was a darned good surveyor, let us return to City Hall, which needs nothing more than a good Mayor.

Fair Employment in Practice

The Mirror
Public Opinion

Study of state and local FEP laws in effect since 1945 shows that many employers have withdrawn their original opposition; agencies use punitive powers sparingly, rely on education and conciliation; laws with enforcement held more effective than those without it.

From a Staff Report by Professor Morroe Berger, Princeton University, to a U.S. Senate Labor Subcommittee

Enforceable fair employment practice laws have been in operation for several years in seven states and two cities, covering about a third of the nation's total population.

The states are Connecticut, Massachusetts, New Jersey, New York, Oregon, Rhode Island and Washington. The cities are Minneapolis and Philadelphia.

Four other states and 23 other municipalities have some form of fair employment legislation. New Mexico has an enforceable statute, but the Legislature failed to appropriate funds for enforcement. Colorado's law has educational provisions with respect to private employment, but the enforceable provisions apply only to public employment. Indiana and Wisconsin have authorized agencies to attempt to eliminate employment discrimination by conciliation but have granted them no enforcement powers.

This study has made the following findings:
1. Since 1945 the seven state and two city agencies that have enforceable FEP laws have handled about 5900 cases. For about $200 of these cases there are data as to the findings. In 54 per cent of these 5200 cases, the agencies found some form of discrimination, which they were able to eliminate by informal conciliation to the satisfaction of all parties (with six exceptions mentioned below).

New Concept in Civil Rights

Seventy-nine per cent of the complaints have been lodged against employers. Seventy-three per cent of the cases have involved charges of discrimination because of race or color.

Discrimination against white persons has been less frequently reported because, it is believed, such discrimination is more subtle and occurs less in the hiring process than in conditions of work and upgrading.

The small number of cases handled by the agencies is believed to be the result of the facts that these laws represent a new concept in the protection of civil rights; they have been in operation only a few years, and the agencies have sought to move ahead cautiously and to stress their educational functions rather than their compulsory powers.

2. FEP laws have opened many opportunities for workers previously barred because of race, color, religion or national origin, from certain occupations, industries and firms.

The more precise effects of such legislation, however, would have to be measured by special studies requiring original research and much data not yet compiled.

3. The FEP agencies have reduced discrimination and expanded opportunity through their settlement of complaint cases, changing employment patterns in small and large enterprises, promoting fair practices in state and in private commercial employment agencies, reducing exclusionary practices in unions, diminishing the frequency of discriminatory job advertisements in newspapers and discriminatory questions on employment application forms, and promoting healthy group relations in the community.

4. The laws with enforcement provisions have been more effective in reducing discrimination in employment than those without such provisions. This conclusion emerges from the data presented by the seven states and two municipalities that have given their FEP agencies such powers, and from the fact that the two state agencies without such powers have not presented data showing an equal degree of success in eliminating discrimination.

Few Rulings Are Challenged

5. The FEP agencies have conducted the kind of educational programs which many persons and groups have insisted would be the best way to promote better intergroup relations and to reduce employment discrimination.

6. The integration of minority groups into industry, resulting from FEP laws, has been accomplished to the satisfaction of employers, workers and labor unions. Although employers generally opposed the enactment of an enforceable FEP law, many of them have since expressed their belief that such legislation has not prevented them from hiring the most competent employees available, and has had positive beneficial effects. Many employers have also reported that their policy of fair employment has been carried out without difficulty.

7. The enforcing agencies have done their jobs cautiously, emphasizing their educational functions and using their compulsory powers sparingly. In the seven states and two cities with enforceable FEP laws in operation since 1945, in only six of the approximately 5900 cases has an administrative agency found it impossible to settle a case by conciliation.

In these six cases the agency found it necessary to go to the stage of a formal hearing. In five of the six cases the agency went so far as to issue an order requiring the respondent to cease and desist from illegal discrimination.

8. Only a few rulings of the FEP agencies have been challenged in the courts, and in no case has such a ruling been reversed.

How a "Ten-Buck Session" Works

From The Hannibal Courier-Post

When Senator William M. Quinn proposed his constitutional amendment which would limit regular sessions of the Missouri Legislature to five months, and, in order to keep members on the job and thus able to get their business completed in that period of time, provide for $10 a day extra expense money, there was considerable conjecture.

So far, it is impossible to say whether or not the lawmakers will be able to complete their necessary work by the end of next May. But, insofar as the "ten-buck" expense money provision it has achieved its primary objective.

The record of the month of January shows that the 34-member Senate had an average attendance for days in session of 27 plus. The House with 135 on the roll averaged 119 plus. Even for the first month of the session that was a very good showing.

Now, as to the cost, that is a matter that depends upon how one is going to value it. The Senate has not argued about it, each one who is present being credited with $10. In the House, an itemized statement of expenditures is being required.

The cost: Senate, $2990.

House, $14,150.74.

If they get the job done and are ready to close the books on May 31 that may not be too much.

THE ULTIMATE INQUIRY.

From The Shiloh Democrat.

Ordinarily this writer does not encourage congressional investigations, having a notion they are often inspired by enmity rather than sincerity of purpose. But we would favor an investigation of all the investigations conducted by Congress in the last eight years, with a report on the cost of each and the accomplishments resulting from the findings.

Some of us skeptics might be silenced by such information, while on the other hand the nation might be saved some money by discouraging the unlimited number of investigations constantly going on.

Between Book Ends

Brilliant and Brutal

THE BIRDS AND THE BEES, by James Aswell. (Random, 244 pp., $3.)

This novel will shock some readers because of its brutally frank treatment of sex and will attract others for its pitiless probing of the emotions. Mr. Aswell, a novelist with a small but distinctive output, presents a group of characters of unexceptionable men and mercilessly exposes their weaknesses, as well as watching sardonically from the sidelines.

The characters are Southerners, but this is far from being a magnolia-and-moonlight story. Aileen Halloran is about to see her daughter, Rowdy, married to Price Deane. On the surface everything looks fine and dandy. But almost at once the probing begins.

Aileen herself is a "chick, slightly wonky, perfectly self-possessed and vaguely discarded woman." Rowdy admits to being swept beneath her poised exterior by powerful and not very proper passions. Only Price Deane seems to match his respectable appearance, and he is not the most admirable character in the book.

Enter Randy Blane, a handsome no-good who has what Rowdy wants and carries her off into a tempestuous encounter. There is violence and action and shock for everybody concerned (including the reader) before the story ends more or less where it began.

Over all of this witch's brew—distilled into a languid-looking prose—presides Mr. Aswell, obviously enjoying his public impaling of respectability. Nor can the objective reader withhold admiration for his performance.

From some musty tome the author has culled a series of pious exhortations (in a maidenly modesty, uttered in 1869 by a long-forgotten minister, the Rev. D. M. Wolk. In large and striking type these quotations devastatingly precede each chapter to set a mood of cynicism that is never dispelled. We have come a long way since 1869, implies the author, but in which direction have we traveled?

"The Birds and the Bees" is a bluffer but brilliant novel with the impact of a bullet. Read it and you will remember it.

JOHN BARKHAM.

The Gospels in Modern Idiom

THE GOSPELS TRANSLATED INTO MODERN ENGLISH, by J. B. Phillips. (Macmillan, 243 pp., $2.75.)

In still another modernization of the Gospels, the author has undertaken to translate the idiomatic language of the Greek of the gospel accounts into a modern English equivalent of colloquial speech.

His contention is that in the simple unpolished Greek of the gospel writers it is to be found a better understanding of the meaning of the original authors than in the versions translated from classical texts, and that understanding is also better served by his version in idiomatic English of today.

Concerned not at all with word-for-word translation, the author tries to reveal the thought of the original writers. Appraising the majesty and dignified simplicity of the Authorized Version, Phillips, an English vicar, ascribes these qualities to the scholarship of the translators rather than to the original writers. The earliest and most reliable accounts, he says, were written in a debased language which had lost its classical beauty but retained its verity.

THE WILD ONES: DARK BRIDWELL, by Vardis Fisher. (Pyramid, 25c.)

Now in a paperback edition, this is an account of the complex personality and tall deeds of Charlie Bridwell, an Idaho homesteader, with special emphasis on his deep affection for his wife and his abiding hatred of one of his sons. The tale is a powerful reconstruction of a frontier legend, long on brutality and short on unity.

WALTER LIPPMANN

Importance of Anglo-American Talks

EVEN before the talks with Mr. Eden and Mr. Butler begin there can be no doubt as to where they must surely lead. They must lead to an agreement that the Atlantic nations are one financial and trading community, not to be split apart into separate systems.

Whatever the problems raised by specific measures, a fundamental agreement to unite, not to permit a fission and a break-up, is not really debatable. But it can be left unsaid, or he said ambiguously. For if no such fundamental agreement between the present British Government and the Eisenhower Administration is reached and announced, the forces of fission and disintegration which are now in check will be released and will become stronger on both sides of the Atlantic. At some point they may well become irresistible.

This first public encounter between the two governments is not one more in the long series of postwar meetings to deal with the reconstruction of the broken economy of the Western world.

Similar Governments.

It is the opening of a new chapter. For the first time in a long generation the two English-speaking nations, who are the financial and economic leaders of the non-Communist world, are both of them governed by men who believe that markets, subject to law and well policed, are better regulators of economic activity than the separate national governments, legislating under the impact of pressure groups and intervening by administrative decrees.

For the first time in two decades the two governments are in the hands of men who profess the same philosophy. From 1933 until the outbreak of the war, there was the New Deal on this side of the Atlantic with its strong, though far from constant, inclination to a planned national economy.

In war, of course, no economy can be free; every economy is planned and regulated in wartime. After the war there was the Labor Government in Britain, which, like any government committed to a planned economy, was nationalistic and isolationist in its foreign economic relations.

Working Basis for Trade.

Thus London and Washington have never been in step, except during the war years, for a generation. Now, once again, they could be. Theoretically, they ought to be. According to the question is whether they have the moral energy and the political resourcefulness to exercise their authority and to exert their leadership.

A failure to do this would have enormous consequences. There could be a failure even without necessarily an open disagreement. There would be a failure if the meeting ended without the certainty that it had been the first of a progressive series of discussions and negotiations in which both governments intend to find the working basis for uniting and opening the trade and finance of the free world.

The two governments had to meet. When the meeting is over,

PAUL J. WIELANDY OF STATIONERY FIRM DIES

Founder and Retired President of Company Succumbs to Infirmities.

Paul J. Wielandy, one of the founders and former president of the Blackwell Wielandy Co., wholesale stationers and printers, died today of infirmities at his home, 50 Bellevue Acres, Normandy. He was 89 years old.

Mr. Wielandy began his business career before he was 20 years old as a traveling salesman of stationery supplies in western territories. In 1901 he and A. M. Blackwell of Las Vegas, N. M., whom he met on a business trip, formed Blackwell Wielandy. Their first store was at Seventh and St. Charles streets. The firm later moved to its present quarters at 1805 Locust street.

As a result of his early travels in the West, Mr. Wielandy owned a fine collection of Indian blankets and equipment. In the business field he and his late partner designed the Big Chief and Blue Jay writing tablets, used in elementary schools throughout the nation.

Interested in civic affairs, Mr. Wielandy was a director of the Municipal Opera Association and of the St. Louis Safety Council. He was a member of the first State Highway Commission and was an advocate of good roads in Missouri. He retired from active business in 1941, becoming chairman of the board of Blackwell-Wielandy, died in 1950.

Surviving Mr. Wielandy is his daughter, Mrs. Campbell Alexander, with whom he made his home. Funeral services will be held on Saturday, at a time to be announced, from the Kron undertaking establishment, 2707 North Grand boulevard. Burial will be in St. Peter's Cemetery.

MRS. CONRAD PEPER FUNERAL

Mrs. Peper, the former Mary Hemenhew, was 67 years old. She died last night at Deaconess Hospital after illness of several weeks. Her husband died in 1940. Surviving are two sons, Henry W. Peper and Alexander Peper II, and a daughter, Mrs. Nadine Meoli, all of St. Louis.

'CLAUDIA' OPENS RUN OF WEEK AT EMPRESS

June Lockhart and Ansell Players Give Acceptable Performance of Play.

By MYLES STANDISH
June Lockhart and the Ansell players gave an acceptable performance at the Empress Playhouse last night of Rose Frank's sentimental, sometimes amusing but rather superficial comedy-drama, "Claudia." The play was a hit on Broadway in 1941 with Dorothy McGuire as star, and played here twice at the American Theater in 1942.

This was Miss Lockhart's third appearance of the season at the playhouse, and a near-capacity crowd greeted her. She had the audience with her, and got a good many laughs on her lines as Claudia Naughton, the young wife of a prosperous, successful, who lives with him on a farm near New York. Although it sufficed as a stock company vehicle, the role isn't quite for her, however.

Much stress is laid on Claudia's immaturity, the fact she is a fledgling woman too early, psychologically, from her mother's nest. She is supposed, in the course of the play, to grow up mentally and face the facts of life, like balancing check-books, learning the correct meaning of volition, who like symphonies, and finding out how cows get milk, on the comedy side; and, on the serious side, how to face the coming of a baby and the shock of the news her mother is dying.

Miss Lockhart is an attractive young woman who can simulate airy ingenuousness very effectively. She has charm, and played a sweet, naive ingenuite of refreshing frankness enchantingly in "For Love or Money." But that role was solely on the cute side. This calls for rather childish, thing, wistfully and with engaging artlessness reaching out for life. Here June seems somewhat too mature, both in mind and body.

Light comedy would appear her metier. She hardly evokes as much pathos as her anguish over her mother calls for. Neither can she summon up that sense of suddenly flowering instinctive wisdom which would deepen the role, although the author certainly didn't write it in succinctly.

The play itself is merely on the smoothly romantic level of the slick women's magazine material which the Claudia stories originally were. The comedy lines haven't much real wit or pathos, or penetration into the ups and downs of marriage or attitudes toward life. The playwright self-consciously disclaims whimsy as the stock-in-trade of his heroine, when a flimsy English author tells Claudia, the sounds like a character in one of those bad whimsical novels, and she denies it. Yet the whimsical, capricious reaction is exactly what the comedy consists of. And, while not exactly subtle, the emotional upheavals merely skim the surface. They don't bite deep enough to arrest and hurt, to make this anything like an experience in life, to arouse compassion. In other words, they offer a lot of sugar to sweeten a little sorrow.

Ken McKewen of the resident company showed up very well as the husband, David, and Edith Fisk gave a dignified, restrained performance for her best role of the season as Claudia's mother, Leo Luckner was cast too happily as the English author, Clyde Waddell and Velma Boyton were quite satisfactory as the Naughtons' hired couple.

The play runs through Sunday evening.

SPEAKS ON CANCER AND GASTRIC ULCER

Dr. Howard K. Gray Stresses Difficulty of Distinguishing Between Them.

The difficulty of distinguishing a stomach cancer from an ordinary gastric ulcer was stressed here last night by Dr. Howard K. Gray, head of a surgery section at Mayo Clinic, Rochester, Minn.

Dr. Gray, professor of surgery at the Mayo Foundation, Graduate School of Medicine, University of Minnesota, gave the annual Hodgson lecture, under the sponsorship of the St. Louis Surgical Society, at a meeting of the St. Louis Medical Society, 3839 Lindel boulevard.

"It may be stated unequivocally that all ulcers and lesions of the stomach must be considered to be malignant until they can be proved otherwise," he said.

He pointed out that about half of the patients with cancer of the stomach will say the first symptom noticed was "an ill-defined dyspepsia." He said nearly half will feel definite improvement temporarily if given treatment for an ordinary ulcer of the stomach or duodenum.

"In any case in which the chief symptoms are referable to the stomach and do not respond immediately and permanently to simple therapeutic measures, the possibility of cancer of the stomach must be entertained," he said.

Only a competent pathologist can tell for sure whether a stomach ulcer is cancerous, he said. As an encouraging aspect of cancer, he said patients at Mayo Clinic with gastric cancer had shown a marked increase in survival rate. Only 5 per cent of those admitted from 1907 to 1916 survived five years, compared with 14 per cent of those admitted from 1940 to 1949.

The Hodgson lecture was established in 1921 in honor of Dr. John T. Hodgson, early-day St. Louis surgeon who died in 1882.

He was internationally known for his work on gall tractures. He was professor of surgery at the old St. Louis Medical College and served as president of the American Medical Association.

Administration Shows Alarm at Oil Grab

WASHINGTON.
THE Eisenhower Administration is indicating growing alarm that what some private interests are seeking, with considerable support in Congress, is not at all the conservation of natural resources envisioned by Theodore Roosevelt whom the President has made a model for his conservation policy.

The Administration belatedly seems to be waking up to the very clear fact, emphasized in this column before it assumed office, that the drive to quitclaim offshore oil lands to the states is the opening of a Pandora's box for a really big grab of our natural resources.

In short, to establish a precedent for turning back all public lands within the states. That would mean easier exploitation of minerals and metals, forest resources, grazing lands, and development of rivers for private profit rather than in the general public interest.

That is directly contrary to the Theodore Roosevelt policy of preserving our natural resources by integrated national management in behalf of all the people, which is not possible if every state where there are public lands is left to its own whims in bargaining off natural resources in what now is the public domain.

He also may have been influenced by the testimony before the committee last week by Senator Estes Kefauver (Dem., Tennessee), who now has such a big public following as a result of his campaign for the Democratic presidential nomination.

The Tennessee Senator, who urged that a commission be appointed to study the whole problem involved in the offshore lands before Congress takes any action, warned that "we are leading to some new policy—or perhaps I should say no policy—with regard to the public lands and their natural resources—with regard to public power development, the national parks and reclamation lands within the interior of the United States."

Liquidation of Our Wealth.
"If we are saying under the quitclaim bill, as I think we are, that the individual states are entitled to this land beneath the sea that has been considered in the same light as public lands, then it is difficult to see any difference whatsoever in saying that the individual states within the United States are entitled to the public lands within their own boundaries."

As for the President, he added, "I know that the American people did not elect him to preside over the liquidation of our national wealth."

State control of the offshore lands is not only wrong in itself, but could perpetrate untold wrongs as a precedent.

Public Lands Question.

Though citing the constitutional question as the reason why he opposed a blanket quitclaim for the states, it was manifest that Attorney General Brownell also was aware of the inherent dangers to our whole natural resources conservation policy about the granting of title in the coastal lands to the states, of which Wyoming is one of 14, should not also be given to the states, Mr. Brownell said that was an entirely separate question and had no relation to the issue involved in the offshore lands.

However, a connection has been argued by Senator Barrett and

Yankees Running to Catch Up After Signing Late

Bob Young in Browns' Special Batting Drill; Marion Wants Him to Learn to Hit to Left

By L. A. McMaster Of the Post-Dispatch Sports Staff

SAN BERNARDINO, Calif., March 4—The Browns' punch of the early intra-squad days disappeared like the California snow, except for that on the mountain peaks...

So, extra batting practice has been put into the daily program. That is, if the activities can be termed customary. The manager's ideas change, of course, according to developments, and where one day he may stress hitting, the next day it might be largely fielding practice.

But 1-to-1 scores in two intra-squad games and 4-to-3 counts on a couple of occasions set Marty to wondering. He decided that some of the men who like to hit very hard at any stage of the work needed some extra swings and others who had arrived late would benefit from overtime with bats in their hands.

Accordingly, along with wind sprints, a long after-practice batting session was held yesterday for half a dozen or more athletes. Among them was Clint Courtney, who has been here only a few days and who likes to swing a bat at every opportunity...

Manager Eddie Stanky said yesterday after his second practice game of the spring, that he couldn't remember ever training under better conditions than those prevailing here. The weather has been virtually perfect, with an 85-degree temperature each day the club has been here.

Furthermore, the city officials do everything that the club requests. Stankys wanted a better background at the center field fence, to help his hitters. City officials experimented with screens above the fence in center and when that didn't work out they had palm trees planted to present a solid background against the center field sky for the hitters.

The squad game was not exactly what the manager would call a big league affair in every respect. The Enos Slaughteres defeated the Peanut Lowreys, 8 to 5, largely because the Lowreys made six errors, five of them in a five-run fourth inning.

"We'll have some extra batting practice," Stanky said with a grimace after the game. "Batting practice and some drilling on base running and signs to get us ready for the exhibition games, which start Saturday with the Yankees. There were some errors, yes, but it was a good workout. How about that catch Repulski made in the seventh inning?"

It was a great catch. Stankys had been describing Repulski as a major league center fielder, good enough defensively to play on anybody's ball club...

McCarran Act Keeps Six Members of Senators From Entering U.S.—Dark Gets Two-Year Contract From Giants

ORLANDO, Fla., March 4 (UP)—Bucky Harris, manager of the Washington Senators, made the best of a unique situation today when six of his Cubans were denied entry to the United States...

"I'm not too worried about the pitchers like Connie Marrero and Julio Moreno," Harris said. "They've been playing winter ball and are in good shape. In fact, it should be a break for both those fellows who begin to tire in mid-summer because they've been playing ball all year long."

"It's a different story with this kid Raul Sanchez," (Sanchez blanked the Red Sox with five hits in his major league debut last Sept. 3.) I wanted to see what he could do.

"I'd like to have the other fellows around, too," he continued. "There are Frank Campos, Angel Scull and Juan Vistuer."

PHOENIX, Ariz., March 4 (UP)—Shortstop and Capt. Alvin Dark of the New York Giants joined a select group able to wangle better than one-year contracts from club President Horace Stoneham.

A 301-hitter last season, negotiated a two-year pact calling for $32,000 each season. Other Giants who have had long-term contracts were Bill Terry and Mel Ott, who got them as managers, and Walker Cooper in 1946.

TUCSON, Ariz., March 4 (UP)—Sluggish Larry Doby and 23-game winner Early Wynn were en route to the Cleveland Indians' training base today and expected to sign soon after their arrival.

Both holdouts responded to ultimatums from General Manager Hank Greenberg, who now plans similar telegrams to pitchers Mickey Harris, Lloyd Dickey and Jose Santiago. Bobby Avila, the Indians' sixth unsigned player, is reported en route and no longer regarded as a holdout by Greenberg.

NEW ORLEANS, La., March 4 (AP)—Second baseman Connie Ryan said he had agreed to terms with the Philadelphia Phillies and would leave for the Clearwater, Fla., training camp. The New Orleans infielder signed for an undisclosed sum after a phone conversation with Manager Steve O'Neill. Ryan seemed to be satisfied.

VERO BEACH, Fla., March 4 (UP)—The Brooklyn Dodgers fished their broken power-five home runs—in yesterday's intra-squad game. Key hit in Coach Cookie Lavagetto's 13-11 victory over the "Charley Dressens" was Pitcher Ronnie Lee's grand-slam home run. Other homers were by Duke Snider, Wayne Belardi, Jackie Robinson and Don Thompson.

BRADENTON, Fla., March 4 (UP)—Two rookies were given first crack at the Boston Braves' regular centerfield berth which has been held since 1950 by Sam Jethroe.

Manager Charley Grimm switched Jethroe, a 233 hitter last season, to left field and assigned Bill Bruton and Jim Pen-ington to center. Bruton hit 325 for Milwaukee in the American Association while Pennington hit 291 for Montreal in the International League last season.

HAVANA, Cuba, March 4 (UP)—Ralph Kiner's holdout campaign drew the criticism of one of his staunchest supporters today—John Galbreath, president of the Pittsburgh Pirates.

Galbreath, who often intervened on Kiner's side in past salary disputes, called the home run king's action "a bad example for youths who idolize him."

"A player of his stature and making his money should be here pronto and try to help other players," Galbreath said. "I believe he is getting bad advice and am very disappointed."

CLEARWATER, Fla., March 4 (AP)—The Philadelphia Phillies signed Veteran Relief Pitcher Ken Heintzelman to a 1953 contract. The Phils announced Heintzelman came to terms after a conference with Owner Bob Carpenter.

TAMPA, Fla., March 4 (AP)—The Cincinnati Reds are learning to watch Manager Rogers Hornsby for a tipoff as to the end of their daily workout. That comes when Hornsby takes off his shoes.

"When my dogs start barking and I have to remove my shoes, I know the boys have had enough work," said Hornsby.

Hornsby started the one workout a day system with the Reds this year and it has caught on in a hurry with his boys. They like it.

Hennessey Hits 730 as Strohs Get 3524 Total

DETROIT, March 4 (AP)—The Stroh bowling team, which holds the world match-game crown, came within two pins of the high series in the nation this season by rolling a 3524 count last night.

The high for the season was a 3526, turned in last November by the Ferranti-Ballentine team in Scituate, Pa.

Rolling in the all-star classic, Detroit's top league, Stroh counted 1186-1183-1175. No score under 201 was posted as Ed Lubanski hit 751, Tom Hennessey 750, Buzz Fazio 718, Tony Lindemann 683 and Lee Jougland 642.

JOHNSON to Box Gilliam. TOLEDO, O., March 4 (AP)—Harold Johnson, the No. 1 light-heavyweight contender, will meet heavyweight Bill Gilliam in a 10-round nationally-televised bout at the Sports Arena March 21, promoter Sid Goldberg of the Mercury Athletic Club announced.

Archie Moore Stops Andrews In Fifth Round

SACRAMENTO, Calif., March 4 (UP)—Light-heavyweight Champion Archie Moore chased Benny Andrews for 4½ rounds last night before opening a cut over Andrews' left eye to score a technical knockout in their scheduled 10-round main event. The sell-out crowd appeared frayed when referee Max Baer stopped the bout after 1:30 minutes of the fifth round.

Andrews, 171, Los Angeles, had attempted throughout to keep as much distance as possible between him and the champion.

Moore, fighting at 182 pounds, toyed with his opponent. His chief difficulty was in keeping up with the fast-retreating Andrews.

Moore finished both the third and fourth rounds with flurries of body and head blows which had Andrews reeling when the bell rang. He opened the cut over Andrews' eyes initially in the third round.

Fort Wood Triumphs. FT. LEONARD WOOD, Mo., March 4 (AP)—Fort Leonard Wood won the Fifth Army boxing title in tournament concluded here last night. All winners will go to Camp Atterbury, Ind., to compete in the all-army fight tournament March 24.

In the Ozarks

By Z. Lee Stokely

Ozark Sportswoman and Outdoor Writer.

Gars and bowfins are the two most predaceous species of fish existing today. They are the gluttonous wolves of the waters and consume their weight in other fishes every 24 hours. If one gar and one bowfin were placed in a large lake teeming with other fish, it would be only a matter of time until the entire fish population of the lake would consist of one hefty gar and a very corpulent bowfin.

Fossilized forms of these two fishes are found in deposits of the Mesozoic period. For fifty million years they have survived the cataclysmic changes of tropical heat, arctic cold, volcanic eruptions, earthquakes, and glacial penitence.

Today, tempered by eons of time, they are the fighting gladiators of all the finny tribe which give no quarter—"tacklebusters" fighting with a demoniacal fury that is unsurpassed. "Game fish" is a misnomer, for these so-called "trash" fishes have no equal in the savagery of battle, and the successful landing of either leaves the angler limp with excitement and fatigue.

Have Various Names.

Bowfins are seldom referred to in the Ozarks by any nomenclature other than grindle. Sometimes when they are caught by an unsuspecting fisherman, who is not versed in the various species of fishes, he is told by the natives that the fish is a "cypress trout" or a "prairie bass."

The fish is proudly placed on the stringer and carried home, but the angler finds, to his dismay, that the prized fish is sadly lacking in the eating qualities of either bass or trout, and that a fried cypress shingle would be comparable in taste. In various states they are called mudfish, dogfish, mudjack, and lake lawyer.

Fisheries biologists say that the female bowfin spawns at night and the male guards the eggs for the night to ten days required for their hatching. As soon as the eggs hatch, the fry attach themselves to dead twigs or water plants by an adhesive organ on their snouts. When about nine days old the immature bowfins are capable of swimming, and the adhesive attachment organ ceases to be used. They follow the prey and feed on a wide variety of insects which are about four inches in length. After this period they are on their own and each goes its separate way. The adult fish often reach a length of more than two feet and specimens have been caught that weighed more than 12 pounds.

There are four species of gar in Missouri waters. The long-nosed gar is perhaps the most common. They bill or beak is very similar to that of the ocean-dwelling swordfish. The short-nosed gar has a short, broad beak much like the northern pike or pickerel. The spotted gar's snout is a compromise between the long- and short-nosed species. These fish are found in northern Missouri lakes but are common in Missouri except in the southeastern counties. The alligator gar, as his name implies, is the ugliest, meanest, fiercest, and roughest of all his kindred brethren. This fish is the monster of the Mississippi and its lower tributaries. In a hotel lobby in Stuttgart, Arkansas, there hangs the picture of one which weighed 198 pounds. Today's alligator gar, like his ancient ancestors, wears an armor plate made up of tough scales which, in adults, are often thicker than an inch thick. Each scale has a protruding hook that locks into a hole in an adjoining scale. The effect is that of a suit of chain mail as worn by the Knights of the Round Table.

Equipped by Nature.

Nature amply equipped the gar and bowfin to survive conditions that would prove fatal to fish of other species. Both of these species are unique in the world of fishes, inasmuch as they have an air bladder connected to the throat and used as a lung, enabling them to live in water unfit for other fish; they simply rise to the surface and gulp in fresh air when needed.

Reelfoot Lake in Tennessee has griddle fishing devotees who travel hundreds of miles in order to battle with these hard-hitting, doughy fighters. On the lower White River, near Stuttgart, Arkansas, hundreds of fishermen are attracted each year by the scrapping alligator gars. For these fighters, only heavy salt-water rigs are sufficient. One fisherman tried using an ordinary bass rod and ended up with only the rod handle and reel. Both species are smacking, slashing, gymnasts, the scrapping gyrations of which would do credit to the gamest tarpon, of similar size. While the brawling qualities of either the gar or bowfin are inferior to those of a bass or trout, neither does the tarpon compare with a pompano if the culinary aspect is to be given first consideration.

Webster Becomes 'Team to Beat' With First State Victory

Beaumont Wins From Sikeston

By Harold Tutthill

Of the Post-Dispatch Sports Staff.

COLUMBIA, Mo., March 4.—Beaumont became the fourth St. Louis area high school team to reach the second round of the state "A" basketball tournament when it defeated Sikeston here this afternoon.

The score was 39 to 30.

COLUMBIA, Mo., March 4.—Merrell Webster, Groves rolled along and prep fans here today were ready to concede the undefeated Statesmen may be the team to beat for the state Class A basketball crown.

When Webster outgamed Webb City, 66-57, in the opening round of the state tournament last night it marked the twenty-sixth consecutive triumph for Tyke Yates' Orange and Black Suburban League Kings.

The Statesmen touched off a string of St. Louis victories. McKinley used its ball control methods to beat a good team from Kansas City, Northeast High, 53-46, and Cleveland made it a perfect night for the boys from the banks of the Mississippi by eliminating Springfield Senior High's classy club, 66-54.

Three Styles of Play.

Last night the three winners showed the fans different kinds of winning basketball. The crowd, announced at 7:00 paid despite miserable driving condition in the state, saw Webster battle once-beaten Webb City tooth and nail before the issue was decided.

McKinley, in deliberate Goldberg fashion, took its time and outsmarted Northeast's big and slightly slow squad. Cleveland and Springfield then engaged in a foot race and there aren't many who can beat the Dutchmen at that type of ball.

Cleveland has been whipped four times, but by only three schools—Webster twice, Beaumont and Roosevelt.

Webster was as tense as any school which has been 20 years away from state series could be. Although the Statesmen won by nine points, the triumph was not that easy. The score was tied seven times, the last at 39-39, when Joe Grisham dropped in a free throw for Webb City.

Don Carter, who played a splendid game for Webster, broke the tie with a fielder. Ed Nealey, Webb City, came back with a free throw, but Bob Woodson counted from scrimmage and at the end of three quarters Webster was in front 46-41.

So fierce was the struggle that before the end, three of Webster's regulars had fouled out and two from Webb City went out by the foul rule. Carter, who scored 21 points, had four personals on him, but big Jim Krebs, who was off his game, had 15 points and five fouls. So did Bob Woodson, who covered Jim Hunter, Webb City's good scorer, in fine fashion. Hunter made only four buckets.

Woodson tallied 11 points while he was in the lineup as Herschel O'Kelley, the third Webster regular who fouled out, scored six points. Taylor Stoneman had five points to account for the scoring done by the regulars.

Sherwood Carr hit twice from scrimmage in the fourth quarter. Don Buersklin got three-point goal and Les Dahlheimer two free throws among the subs. Hudson Helmlich and Laurie Heinemann, who also had a part in the victory, failed to score.

Subs Make Difference.

But as Coach Yates expressed it afterward, the substitutes made the difference between victory and defeat, so today the Orange and Black had achieved another of its ambitions—to break the first round flunk which had tripped them on three previous sorties to the interscholastic classic.

Cleveland, led by bounding Bob Mill's 24 points and 22 by Arnie Kaestner, Earl Jansen's improving center, also made progress in trying to overcome a second-round slump.

McKinley, now 22-6 for the season, defeated a Kansas City school which came here with a 16-3 record. The Goldbugs of Lawrence Buschmann, moving cautiously, trailed at the quarter, 17-15, but took a halting advantage of 26-24 and they never relinquished their edge in the second half.

'Burros' Sluggish at First But Good for Long Pull as It Wins Class B Opener

By John J. Archibald

Of the Post-Dispatch Sports Staff.

ELVINS, Mo., March 4.—On a blackboard in the John Burroughs dressing room someone had scrawled, "Beat Burros!" Whether the reference to donkeys was accidental or on purpose, the Burroughs showed they can outdo any mule train when it comes to the long pull, turning in their twenty-first victory of the season against one loss in the Class B regional opener last night.

Wellsville, which displayed some mule-stubbornness itself before giving in to the favored Burroughs club, was a 65-42 victim of the St. Louisans.

Wellsville was tied with Burroughs after a quarter, 15-15, and behind by only 24-28 at the half, but was finally buried by a 23-point last period barrage. Owensville defeated Leadwood, 53-44, in the other game.

Brentwood Plays Elvins.

Brentwood will be the St. Louis area representative in tonight's action, going in as underdog against the third-seeded home club, Elvins, at 8:30. Warrenton, ranked second, will oppose Hermann at 7 o'clock.

By sinking a few of their easier shots Wellsville might have led Burroughs at half time, for the Burroughs seemed sluggish. The Tigers' sharp passing enabled them to have numerous unobstructed shooting chances, but they couldn't take full advantage. Wellsville made only three field goals in the second quarter.

Bobby Thym was again the heaviest hitter for Burroughs, and it was his four field goals and a free throw that enabled Coach Ray Wolfe's club to pull away to a 42-34 lead after three quarters.

Everybody joined in during the fourth-period flurry. Gates Agnew added three field goals, Ralph Weinrich and Gordon Philpott two goals and a free throw each, and Thym a goal and two free throws, to pace the attack.

Thym had 23 points for the

IN CASH Directly to You! . . .

(You get this EXTRA MONEY for Hospital, Medical, and Household Bills in addition to any other insurance you may have, including Workmen's Compensation.)

In 1936 I organized Group Hospital Service, Inc., the "Blue Cross Plan" in St. Louis, which brought to our community a service which I believe is unequalled in the long history of our City.

Since organization the St. Louis Blue Cross has paid to the hospitals over Sixty-five ($65,000,000) Millions for hospital care for its members.

Today, approximately one million people in this area have Blue Cross protection and I am very proud of the part I played in bringing this service to you.

TIMES HAVE CHANGED. The past few years have been hectic ones. The cost of everything has increased. With this thought in mind we have worked long and hard to develop a very necessary supplement to your present hospital insurance—The Hospital Protector Plan.

This new plan is something that millions of people have wanted and now we have it at a price everyone can afford to pay. A Plan that will pay you a weekly cash indemnity of $50.00-$100.00 or $150.00 per week while in any recognized hospital, up to 104 weeks for any one sickness or accident, depending on the plan you choose. This money can be used to help pay any additional Hospital Expense, Nursing Care, Medical or Surgeon's bills, your Life Insurance premiums, your Rent, care of your Family and other bills that accumulate during a hospital confinement. This weekly cash benefit is paid to YOU to use as you see fit. I strongly urge those of you who can qualify, to keep your hospital insurance and apply for this added protection without delay.

AUSTRALIAN WINS 2 PRIZES IN SAME POOL ON BIRTHDAY

SYDNEY, Australia, March 4 (UP)—Try to figure the odds on this one:

Leslie Horne, a Sydney butcher, won first prize yesterday in a state lottery of 100,000 tickets—and then won second prize on the next draw.

Horne's two winning tickets, only six serial numbers apart, brought him a total of £7000 ($15,680).

CITIZENSHIP OF PAPAL NUNCIO NOT IN DANGER, OFFICIAL SAYS

WASHINGTON, March 4 (AP)—The State Department made plain today it will reject a demand that it revoke the American citizenship of Catholic Archbishop Gerald G. O'Hara, Papal Nuncio to Ireland.

"I know of no law or regulation under which a petition of this kind could be considered the basis for revoking citizenship," said Ruth Shipley, director of the department's passport office.

Paul Blanshard, an American author-lecturer who frequently has criticized Catholic Church policy, demanded the action in a five-page petition given to the American Embassy in Dublin Feb. 16.

Blanshard contended that Archbishop O'Hara, in serving as the Pope's representative in Ireland, was acting as the political representative of a foreign state. He called upon the State Department to recall the Archbishop's passport and to strip him of his American citizenship.

ELIZABETH VOTED TITLE OF NORTH IRELAND QUEEN

LONDON, March 4 (UP)—A bill conferring on Britain's sovereign the titles "Elizabeth II of Northern Ireland, Queen" was approved overwhelmingly in the House of Commons last night despite scattered Scottish and Irish opposition.

The bill passed its second reading by a vote of 328 to 39, and was approved on its third and final reading without a record vote.

Four Scottish Laborites who had demanded in effect that the "II" be dropped from Elizabeth's name walked out of the House when their protest was ignored. Independent Irish nationalists opposed the North Irish title, but made no formal effort to eliminate it from the bill.

Some Expert Advice For Rose Growers

By Mary Kimbrough

LIVING in a town that exports 20,000,000 rose bushes a year and grows many more for its own pleasure, Leon Miller can give would-be rose growers some valuable words of garden wisdom, from the seedling to the vase.

LEON MILLER ermine-trimmed gown of the Texas "Rose Queen" and 3600 freshly-cut Texas roses are on display all this week.

The soft-spoken Texan, whose rose-covered home is in Tyler, is a graduate horticulturist and president of the Co-operative Rose Growers' Association of Texas, including more than 50 commercial growers. He was in St. Louis Monday and Tuesday in connection with a spring "rose festival" at Scruggs Vandervoort Barney, where the $20,000 and 3600 freshly-cut Texas roses are on display all this week.

IT'S NOT too early to plant the tiny bushes in preparation for a summer rose garden, Miller said. They can be placed in the ground any time from now until mid-May, but once they're in, they'll have to be given special care if the vase on the plant is to be filled with handsome blossoms during the hot summer months.

And the gardener can choose from among 3000 varieties, each different in fragrance, color, size or texture from the rest.

Of those 3000 commercially-grown varieties, about 500 make up the bulk of the roses we see in the average garden," said Miller. "The most popular by far is the red radiance. Of the patented varieties, the favorite is Peace, a French rose of yellow tone with shadings of pink."

PROFESSIONAL ROSE GROWERS try constantly to develop new varieties and when they do so, they apply for a patent, just as in the case of a new mechanical invention. A horticulturist at the plant patent office in Washington must determine if it is really new and different from others on the market. The most recent patented blooms are the Susan Lotte, very light pink with shades of yellow and white; Charles Mallerin, dark, almost-black red, and Happiness, long-stemmed bright cerise blossom. Although with its mild climate Tyler has cornered the rose market—more than 70 per cent of the field-grown roses in this country come from there—roses can be grown successfully in the far northern states and even in Canada, Miller said. The bushes begin to bud from mid-May to early June and will continue to bear flowers until the first frost.

HERE ARE SOME of his suggestions for successful rose cultivation.

Plant bushes 18 to 24 inches apart. Water well when they are first planted, but do not use commercial fertilizer at that time. Cultivate plants occasionally during the growing season.

Pinch off the first buds. This is hard for the anxious new gardener to do, but Miller points out that it takes as much food value to mature one blossom as it does for the cane, or branch, to grow eight inches. It is important to give that food value to the branches at first.

When first mature leaves appear, use commercial rose dust. Repeat this dusting procedure after every rain or once a week, but only the roots, not the bush itself. Apply commercial fertilizer every 30 days during the growing season.

CUT STEMS right above the leaf bud. Cut on an angle and be careful not to tear the stems and scar the bush. Flower preservative in the water will keep the cut blossoms fresh longer. And frequent cutting of blossoms helps produce more.

Put a vase of roses in the refrigerator at night or when you leave the house. Put water on the leaves and cover with wax paper. This will preserve the beauty of the blossoms longer.

"But remember," laughed Miller, "that's the refrigerator—not the deep freeze."

Try and Stop Me

By Bennett Cerf

DANNY KAYE says that one of the most intriguing facets of Producer Sam Goldwyn's personality is his unpredictability. When George Balanchine, for instance, was engaged some years ago to do the choreography for "The Goldwyn Follies," everyone, particularly the boss, wanted to know the meaning of an elaborate ballet he rehearsed for weeks. Balanchine found it hard to explain in English. "It ees like thees," he finally conceded. "Zere ees 100 girls on ze left of ze stage. Zey represents ze positive. On ze right of ze stage zere ees 100 boys. Zey represent ze negative. Zey do a queeck dance and poof! Ze girls—ze positive—are now on ze right, and ze boys—ze negative—are now on ze left."

Everybody looked pretty dubious but Maestro Goldwyn. He slapped his hand down on the table and announced, "I LIKE IT."

CHARLES SKOURAS, one of filmdom's big shots, is a merry, fun-loving fellow who, like his older brother Spyros, still speaks with a rich Greek accent. At lunch in Darryl Zanuck's private dining room on the 20th Century-Fox lot one day he found all the big producers and directors of the company gathered around the table. He beamed and announced: "Gentlemen, this is the first time I've ever seen all our wonderful geniuses in one room at the same time. And I think you'll be interested to know that our popcorn concession last year made more for us than the whole bunch of you put together!"

On Broadway

ROSALIND RUSSELL... A "Wonderful" Hit.

FIRST NIGHT: Another Hollywood star brightened the Broadway heavens. Rosalind Russell returned in "Wonderful Town," the musical version of the long-ago delight, "My Sister Eileen." The scene for her triumph was the Winter Garden, the Main Stem's most attractive amusement temple. The critics showered her with halos. The premiere crowds interrupted the proceedings with more "Bravos!" than are heard at the Met. ... The enchanted reviewers acclaimed everything: the superb score, the deft direction, the slick script and the grand gamutting of such mischief-makers as the delightful newcomer, Edith (Eileen) Adams (a teary grad making her initial stage appearance on The Street of Dreams), George Gaynes, Dort Clark and Chris Alexander. The ringiest bells were reserved for Rosalind—a thrilling triumph. ... Confere Atkinson (the N.Y. Times' mortician) rejoiced: "In 'Wonderful Town,' she makes the whole city wonderful. ... Atkinson added that 'Ros will make the whole country wonderful when she is elected President in 1956.' ... Slogan: Ros for Prez!"

Tips for Teens

QUERIES, problems ... the mail to this column is full of them; maybe yours is among them. Let's put on our specs and look for the answers.

Q—"What's good, clean conversation with a boy?" asks a high school freshman just beginning to have dates.

A—Boys, like other people, like to talk about their interests and themselves. ... sports including school games and his own favorite sports. ... his hobby. ... school doings. ... favorite bands, records, movies, books. ... perhaps his plans for the future, his ambition. Give him a compliment; tell him something nice you heard about him. Everybody likes sincere appreciation.

Q—"Would a regular dress be appropriate for a square dance?"

A—A blouse and a flared skirt would be preferable. ... or a cotton dress with a full skirt.

Q—"What is an informal dance? Is it improper to wear a velvet or taffeta skirt to a sport dance?"

A—An informal dance calls for clothes that aren't formal, yet look more "dressed up" than school outfits. ... a street-length dress of rayon, silk, wool, cotton, corduroy, velveteen, etc.; wear shoes and nylon stockings with it, not socks and loafers. For a sport dance, velvet and taffeta are too dressy; wear a wool, cotton or corduroy skirt and a simple blouse.

Signature

By Christopher Billopp

A SIGNATURE is the name of a person written by himself. It is important when it is needed on an official document or to make a check good.

Persons whose signatures are needed live miles away. They do not answer their mail promptly. After their signature has been requested they have to be written to again to ask why they haven't sent their signature.

Signatures invariably are demanded at most inconvenient times, when it is a nuisance to drop everything and sign.

Even after persons have sent their signature on and it has been received those who have demanded it will shake their heads and ask how they are to know this is the true signature. They will say it should have been witnessed by a notary public. So then the signature has to be sent back where it came from for this extra touch.

That is not all. A signature is vitiated because it is not written exactly as it appears elsewhere on a document. It will be pointed out that it should be written William A. Jones and not William Andrew nor Willie A. nor Bill. Signatures provoke suspicion because they are written in pencil and not in ink, or perhaps not in the right ink. There may be doubt about them because nowhere is there indication of the day on which the signature was made.

Public officials think nothing of demanding signatures. They seem to take for granted that they are the easiest thing in the world to get. They ought to be made to get one themselves once in a while. Then they would not be so fussy.

Then perhaps they would let more things be done without signatures, or let signatures that may not be more than 94.6 per-cent perfect do.

Gay Bonnets for the Easter Parade

By Sylvia Stiles

THE Easter bonnet will have more than its usual place of honor in this spring's fashion parade. Hats are prettier, gay and more impressive than they have been for several years. Slim silhouettes and neutral costume shades are credited with giving the milliners an opportunity to exercise their creative skill to the utmost, and judging by the top-name models on display in the St. Louis stores the designers have more than fulfilled expectations. Sketched are eight spring styles illustrating the leading modes.

1—Leslie James likes big hats that have a flattering but dramatic emphasis. This wide-brimmed model of natural straw slips to frame the face.

2—Chanda is regarded as outstanding in applying flowers flat against the body of a hat for unique surface interest. Tiny pink and red rosebuds and russet-toned leaves are arranged on this hat which combines a crown of black velvet with brim of natural colored straw. The brim ripples across the front and there is a dotted veil to cover the upper part of the face.

3—Phil Strahn of California stresses a picturesque quality in his hats, many of which feature the use of nylon tulle with straw. Sketched is a typical model. It is made of straw covered with soft folds of coral nylon tulle. Brim is wide at the sides and shallow front and back. To accentuate this width and provide a pretty trimming, a rose stem, complete with open flower and bud, lies across the top of the hat.

4—Noted for her bonnets, Sally Victor contributes this exceptionally pretty profile version for Easter. Perli visca straw in cornflower blue shade is trimmed with a medley of meadow flowers placed on both sides of the brim. The flowers are tiny and flat to follow the contour of the brim.

5—Hattie Carnegie's close-fitting hat that follows the pillbox silhouette combines white shantung straw with black velvet. Designed for the popular small-head type of coiffure, this very feminine little hat has a rose spray for staccato accent at the front.

6—Dior continues to stress the importance of the close-fitting cap for spring. It is made of pale blue linen straw draped to the head to cover most of the hair.

7—Irene, who will pay her first visit to St. Louis next week, has sent in advance some of her newest fashions. Her square-cut sailor is a favorite theme this season. The top is of navy hatter's plush while the rest of the hat is of fine navy straw. Maline trims the crown and is arranged in a tall bow at the side. Crystal ornaments tucked into the maline are familiar accents. Like other Irene hats, this one has the "silver" lining.

8—The all-white hat is a spring favorite, and there are some unusually attractive ones from which to choose. Sketched is a white straw faille cap designed by Mr. John. The cap is turned up around the face in a profile effect. Shaved, glycerined feathers are arranged in a sweep to follow the line of the face.

The fashions illustrated here are available in St. Louis Shops. Patterns are not obtainable. For information call Main 1111, Station 386, between 9 a. m. and 5 p. m. Monday through Friday, or mail self-addressed stamped envelope to Fashions Illustrated, St. Louis Post-Dispatch.

Two Good Ways to Fix Onions

By Edith M. Barber

WHAT'S the difference between "smothered" onions and plain fried onions? Actually there isn't very much difference. The former demand less attention during the cooking, as they are covered during most of the process. The plain fried onions need to be stirred while they are browning.

If you like well-browned onions it will be worth while to stir them as they cook, in order that they will have an even color and no burnt flavor. You may compromise and cook them uncovered until they reach the proper color, and then let them cook covered over low heat until tender. The time needed will depend upon the size and the type of onions that you have chosen.

For a fine flavor we like to cook the onions in the drippings from the steak that we can collect from the broiler pan, or with left-over drippings that we have reserved for this purpose. While onions cooked in this style are usually served with meat, you can make them into a main luncheon dish by sprinkling with flour after they have browned. When well blended, milk is added and then we have a golden cream sauce. When served over toast, you will have an easy and savory luncheon or Sunday night supper dish.

Smothered Onions.

One and one-half pounds onions, one-fourth cup butter or drippings, one-half teaspoon salt, one-eighth teaspoon pepper. Wash and peel onions and cut in thin slices. Melt butter or drippings in heavy frying pan, add onions and cook over low heat until yellow, stirring often. Add more butter or drippings if necessary. Add seasoning. Cover and let simmer 5 to 10 minutes.

Smothered Mushrooms.

Wash mushrooms, slice and trim tough ends. Slice stems of mushrooms. Sauté mushrooms in butter or margarine (allow one-fourth cup for one pound mushrooms) until lightly browned. Cover and simmer for few minutes. If desired, medium onions may be peeled and sliced and cooked with mushrooms.

Designing Woman Through the Looking Glass

By Elizabeth Hillyer

THE most common mistakes in choosing mirror are made by deciding on those which are too fancy and too small.

The glass itself is interesting in a mirror. Reflections change as it is looked into from different angles, it opens a deep view—Alice of Wonderland fame discovered the wonder of a mirror and stepped through her looking glass into a different world.

The glass should be large enough to catch a deep reflection which will make the room look more spacious, and it should be of a size to balance furniture below.

The frame can be simple, but it should be worthy of the elegance of mirror, which in fine quality always adds a look of luxury to the room.

Designer Everett Brown chose magnolia wood, walnut and gold for the straight frame of a new group of mirrors shown recently among new home furnishings fashions for spring at Chicago's Merchandise Mart and in Grand Rapids.

The frame for one is only 34-inch wide, but is deep enough to give a shadow box effect. It is magnolia wood covered with gold leaf, as is the wider frame sketched on which the gold is antiqued. A third 40-inch square mirror is walnut faced over by expanded aluminum finished in gold.

Martha Carr's

Dear Martha:

I AM just about at my wit's end. I am 21 and am married to a man who is 29 and acts about 10. He does nothing around the house except make more work for me. He doesn't make any repairs and we can't afford to have them done. He goes out every night and on the weekends is out hunting or fishing. He tells me it's none of my business where he's been. We have a 3½-year-old daughter and she is getting almost impossible to handle because of him. He teaches her to swear and tells her to call me all kinds of dirty names. If I spank her he takes her in his arms and tells her I don't love her.

He pours beer, milk and water on the floors after I have cleaned them. There are so many terrible things he does but I know you don't have the time or space. I have suggested going to a minister or marriage counselor but he refuses. There are two reasons why I don't just pack up and leave. One is my daughter, the other is that I have no education to get a job. I told him I would divorce him and he said he wouldn't give me any money for my support or the little girl. In spite of all of these things I still love him and have always tried to be a good wife, mother and housekeeper. I would like to know what you and your readers think of a man like this.

MISERABLE.

As for myself, I think you have over-estimated his age. He acts as if he were 2—not 10. And if he won't go to a minister or marriage counselor, at least you can take the adult and mature steps toward analyzing your problem with someone who can help you, and following professional advice. Whether you can transform him into a neat and orderly person in the house would be hard to say, but what you must do is to protect your daughter from the ugliness and filth your husband is trying to implant in her mind. For her sake, especially, move quickly to ask for help. Go to your pastor, or to the Family and Children's Service for assistance.

Dear Martha:

I AM A GIRL 16 YEARS OLD and have been engaged to a boy who is 19. He has been very nice to me, but recently I have decided that I like an old friend and choose to date him as well as others. The boy to whom I have been engaged seems to be very jealous and doesn't understand my feelings. Should I keep going steady or date other boys as well?

JO ANN.

If your feelings toward this one boy are so casual that you find you can want to date others, then you shouldn't be engaged to him. I think you should be dating these other boys if you like them, but don't do so without letting your present fiancé know that you can no longer agree to go with him exclusively.

50-50 Marriage

By Dr. Paul Popenoe

REMEMBER Miss C., who wrote to me some time ago outlining the unusual sort of marriage she was contemplating—something that was supposed to be a genuine 50-50 proposition?

I printed it largely as a challenge to those who are always parroting, "I say marriage should be a 50-50 proposition!" So? Well, just how 50-50 should it be? Miss C. certainly had a 50-50 proposition put up to her, but now that the returns are in from readers it seems that while such a mathematical formula would appear to be in the realm of the absolute, it isn't when applied to marriage.

YOU MAY RECALL that Miss C. was unmarried, 35 years old with a good job which she wanted to continue until the retirement age a few years hence when she would have a pension for life. She owned her home and had some savings. A man whose position was the same as hers—identical in almost every respect—proposed that they marry and that each pay half the expenses of the household—right across the board. To him, 50-50 meant 50-50. Each had the same resources, each was marrying for companionship; there would be no children; why should either one expect to become a dependent of the other?

The men who have written me think this is a reasonable arrangement. Only one woman approves of it, however, among the many who have written me; and most of them really "lay the man out." "What has she to gain in such a marriage?" Mrs. R. inquires, and quickly answers her own question: "An old, grouchy, stingy man to put up with."

"If she wants companionship," Mrs. W. advises, "she will do well to rent out her own home and live with some other woman. In this way she will save the price of a lawyer for a divorce to which she will certainly turn in a short time."

"I think Miss C. should run from him—but quick," is the opinion of Mrs. M. "It's not that this man offers her nothing in the way of support; but that he offers her nothing. Period."

"I think she would be foolish to marry him at all; in fact it's a foolish thing for any woman to get married," says a wife who signs herself "The biggest fool of all."

AND SO THE LETTERS continue, from women—often very bitter women—who evidently never had a 50-50 marriage. Only one woman in the group had actually tried such an arrangement. In her opinion it was a complete success. Her story is so long and instructive that I will give a separate column to it in the near future.

All these hostile commentaries were married women. I also asked many unmarried women for their opinion. They agreed that in the circumstances Miss C. described, and assuming that the man was willing to do half the work around the house or pay to have it done, his proposal was an entirely reasonable one.

It looks as if Miss C. will have to pay her money and take her choice and it also looks to me as if we all need to think through this matter of a 50-50 marriage a little more carefully and decide what it really means.

Social Problems

By Emily Post

THIS letter from a bride explains: "When we were married, six months ago, a relative promised that she would give us a lamp for a wedding present when we went to housekeeping. We found an apartment two months ago and have just about finished furnishing it. Up to now we have not received the lamp, nor have we heard anything further about it. Could I possibly remind her of this? I don't like to go out and buy one if she is going to give it to us, as I could use the money for something else."

Personally, I can't imagine a living room with only one lamp in it—unless the room is very small and the lamp's light unusually bright. In other words, a second one could scarcely go to waste. However, you could telephone your relative and say that you are now settled and ask her to come to see you. When she does come, and the room is plainly in need of a lamp, she will probably be reminded of her promise.

A New Job at 68 for Mrs. Roosevelt

Now She's Volunteer Worker, Seeking to Promote Understanding of U.N. at Nation's Grass Roots

By Virginia Irwin

A Staff Correspondent of the Post-Dispatch

NEW YORK, March 4. RECENTLY the Gallup poll reported that, for the fourth consecutive time, Eleanor Roosevelt had been rated "the most admired woman" in the world. It might well be that she is also the world's busiest.

Only a few weeks ago Mrs. Roosevelt ended seven strenuous years of service as the United States delegate to the United Nations. Instead of retiring to a rocker at Hyde Park, or at least awarding herself some sort of vacation, the 68-year-old Mrs. Roosevelt plunged immediately into a new job.

As a volunteer worker for the American Association for the United Nations, she has set herself to the task of helping to organize a nation-wide network of A.A.U.N. chapters designed to build an informed public opinion about the United Nations as our best hope for world peace.

"There is a great need for organization on a grass roots basis to provide real understanding and bring truthful information to the people about the United Nations to combat the concerted and well-financed attacks against it," Mrs. Roosevelt said in an interview in her office at 45 East Sixty-fifth street.

Right now the A.A.U.N. is most concerned with getting a state chairman in every state in the union. From there plans of organization and work for A.A.U.N. chapters in the states can be carried out and the chapters can promote the work of building a real understanding of the United Nations through other organizations.

"I see no reason why we should not urge, say, the American Legion or the D.A.R. to have study groups or why members of the A.A.U.N. chapters should not work with educational, fraternal, and women's organizations and, even more important, with business, labor and agricultural groups. Study clubs are all right but I find that people in study clubs are apt to talk to themselves too much. We've got to get down to the grass roots, to see that every person in the United States understands the real purpose and meaning of the United Nations."

As a tireless propagator of faith in the United Nations, Mrs. Roosevelt expects to devote her entire time to the A.A.U.N. soon as her present commitments promised speeches, etc., are disposed of.

Mrs. Roosevelt believes that if the United Nations were not in existence today, it would be created immediately or the world would plunge into a third world war.

"The United Nations," she said, "provides the machinery essential for bringing together the peoples of the world. Without it we might find ourselves involved in another war in a very short time."

And Mrs. Roosevelt sees in the United Nations the only means of bringing home to the Kremlin a true measure of what the nations of the world think about various issues.

"It is valuable for the Soviet to be there," she explained. "Votes taken in the United Nations go directly to the Kremlin and they tell the Soviet Government what the world thinks. That is the only way we can be sure that the Kremlin knows. In any other way we couldn't be sure that Soviet representatives would report back truthfully."

MRS. ROOSEVELT thinks that the various Russian delegates to the U.N. may have themselves been affected by their experiences in rubbing elbows with men of free countries in the United Nations, but she does not for one moment believe that they ever voice the word of approval of our way of life when they return to Moscow.

"Put yourself in a Russian delegate's place," she smiled. "If saying you admired the United States meant that you and your family would go to Siberia would you voice one word of that admiration?"

Mrs. Roosevelt believes that no matter how outrageous the attacks made by the Soviet in the

MRS. ELEANOR ROOSEVELT... SHE BELIEVES "THE UNITED NATIONS PROVIDES THE MACHINERY ESSENTIAL FOR BRINGING TOGETHER THE PEOPLES OF THE WORLD."

United Nations, "it is worth our while to keep the amenities going."

"If the Soviets finally decide they can't communize the world—and that depends a little on us—we want no personal animosities," she said slowly. "We resent what they say, but we must understand that they, the delegates as individuals, can't help it. They are simply disciplined men, who say what they've been ordered to say. If they said anything else, they'd probably go to Siberia."

Asked what she meant by saying that it depended to an extent upon us whether the Communists someday decide they can't communize the world, Mrs. Roosevelt recalled an experience she had at a press conference in India.

"The story had just reached India of the bombing of a Negro's home here in America in an outbreak of racial tension," she said. "Had I heard of that bombing here at home I would have grieved over it as an unfortunate incident. But there in India it hit me in the face and I shuddered because I knew I would be asked over and over, 'Is that what you and the people of the United States mean by democracy?'"

Mrs. Roosevelt further observed that as we fall in the United States to live up to our claim as a truly democratic people, it is not only the United States that suffers but the whole idea of democracy.

"We are the symbol of democracy in what we do and what we do counts the world over," she said, and added, "The Communists can make promises but we have to produce."

That the Soviet Government itself recognizes Mrs. Roosevelt as one of the world's best known and most successful salesmen of democracy is evident from disparaging remarks about her that appear continually in the Communist press. At first the Russians were content to call her nothing more than "a school teacher and meddling old woman," but Ivestia disclosed the Kremlin's true regard for her when it described her as a "hypocritical servant of capitalism... a fly darkening the Soviet sun."

Mrs. Roosevelt began her work at the United Nations seven years ago with a sincere belief that the Soviet delegates could be met half way. By 1949 she had changed her mind and was ready to state publicly that the idea of compromise was useless and that she would never try it again. That she has dropped quite a few flies in Soviet ointment is a matter of record.

As a source of annoyance to Stalin, Mrs. Roosevelt has been the subject of a story. It seems that Lenin's widow, Krupskaya, was more inclined to Trotsky's view than to Stalin's and was so outspoken on the matter that Stalin is said to have remarked, "If that old woman doesn't shut up, I'll appoint someone else Lenin's widow."

When Mrs. Roosevelt began wielding a firm hand as chairman on the Commission on Human Rights in the United Nations and more than once lowered the boom on a Russian delegate, Stalin is said to have been reminded of Mme. Krupskaya and to have remarked, "I wish I had the power to appoint someone else Franklin D. Roosevelt's widow."

ASKED if she thought there would be a third all-out war, Mrs. Roosevelt said: "Not if we're wise, if we stay strong, both militarily and economically, and if we really live up to the principles of democracy."

"I have a feeling that Russia doesn't want global war, that she is a little afraid of what the results might be. But there is always this to consider, the fact that Russia may think we are not as strong as we are. I think Russian spies are perfectly truthful in what they report to the Kremlin in a military way but I doubt if they realize our real strength as a nation of contented people."

"We have gained enormous strength in recent years. Twenty or 30 years ago we had millions of people in both rural and city groups living just on the bare existence line. Today we have, with the possible exception of Canada, fewer people on the bare existence line than any country in the world."

"We have a few millionaires at the top and a few people barely existing at the bottom. But in between there is the enormous group of people with enough to eat, with decent shelter, with education for their children and with some pleasures of life, like a little house of their own and a television set."

"Only if you are as old as I am would it strike you that today you rarely meet a beggar on a city street. As I have traveled throughout the world, I have often thought that our great strength lies in the fact that we are a nation of well-fed, educated and contented people."

Asked if information on the state of our national well-being was not a matter of knowledge in the Kremlin, Mrs. Roosevelt said that of course she had no way of knowing. "But it is certain," she said, "that the Russians do all they can to keep the truth of our comfortable way of life from other nations."

For instance Alexei Pavlov, a Russian delegate to the United Nations and now Ambassador to France, once made a speech, describing how workers in Californias were dying by the thousands. Pavlov, who had been in the United States for some time, knew there was no truth in what he was saying but his speech fell upon fertile ground in many parts of the world. Many believed that there was just another instance of workers being ground under the heel of a capitalist democracy. "Pavlov knew the line," Mrs. Roosevelt says. "He was told what to say and he said it."

MRS. ROOSEVELT thinks that it will be "a long, long time before we can stop being alert—even in our sleep." And she believes that one way of being alert to the threat of Communism is understanding and support of the United Nations.

"The United Nations action in Korea seems to many a sad failure," she said, "but it is really a victory for it has held down Communist aggression in other places. Many people do not understand this. Many also are under the impression that other nations are not doing their share. Of course we are bearing the great brunt of the war in Korea but it must be remembered that Great Britain is suffering heavy losses of men in Malaya and that France, in defending Indochina, has lost proportionately more men than we have in Korea."

In her seven years as a delegate to the United Nations, Mrs. Roosevelt attended some 1000 sessions of the organization, made hundreds of speeches as a delegate and hundreds more as a private citizen devoted and tireless in the cause of bringing a true understanding of the U.N. as a machinery for world peace.

She believes that with the true understanding of how the United Nations works, the American people as a whole will fully accept it as our only hope for world peace.

"One of our troubles today is that we are too impatient," Mrs. Roosevelt said. "The United Nations cannot cure the world's ills overnight. But it has already accomplished much. It is resisting aggression in Korea. It is helping the 600,000,000 people who have won political independence since the war take their place in the family of nations. It gives hope for freedom to additional millions who do not have self-government."

"It has raised the standard of a Declaration of Human Rights to which all people can aspire. It has mobilized the moral and spiritual forces of mankind in the greatest effort to secure a permanent peace the world has ever known. It has accomplished many other things, too, in the few short years since 1945. But still people are impatient, perhaps because they do not understand what has been accomplished."

Through her work with the A.A.U.N., Mrs. Roosevelt hopes to help bring about this understanding.

"What this era calls for is patience and understanding and the stamina to wait," she said solemnly.

When North passed on the last round, thereby letting East virtually steal the hand, South's facial expression was something to behold—if one likes gargoyles! And South's mood was not noticeably improved when East went down only one trick, ruffing South's second lead in spades, drawing trumps, and then establishing the club suit. South could have done a little better by shifting to diamonds and driving out East's king, but in any case East's honors would have made it a very dubious victory for North-South.

The fact was, of course, that North kept his eyes glued too intently on his own near-bust and paid far too little attention to the clear implications of his partner's bidding. South, knowing from North's pass to one spade that he could not expect any support, had nevertheless jumped to four spades over East's three hearts, and moreover he had followed this course (presumably) in full knowledge of the respective vulnerability.

It was unthinkable, then, that South, in passing to five hearts, had intended to make tame submission; very obviously, his only intention could have been to let North decide between a double of five hearts and a continuance to five spades.

Since North had no values whatever against hearts, but did have trump support for South, it should have been easy for him to choose raise to five spades, and that contract—if allowed to stand—would have been made without difficulty by South's using two trump entries in dummy for diamond finesses.

Let's Explore Your Mind

By Dr. Albert E. Wiggam

Answer to Question 1. In some ways, yes, because of your intense thinking about him, or her. As a rule, however, persons in love magnify the other's virtues and minimize the vices and faults. Courses in dating, love-making, and how to judge the opposite sex are rapidly being established in our schools and colleges. Our new booklet, "How to Pick a Mate" has about all the answers. Sent at cost, 15c (coin only), plus self-addressed, stamped envelope.

Answer to Question 2. Yes. A psychologist had numerous men and women speak into a microphone, which nearly always makes an untrained person nervous. Some speak faster and higher than usual, and pause longer between words. A few changed the other way. The experiment seemed to prove that persons change their speech patterns when nervous or frightened—some one way, and some another.

Answer to Question 3. Yes. People do not often explode over trivial things, but as the result of the accumulation of a lot of trivial things. They pile up until you reach the breaking point. You resolve to keep sweet all day, but you can't find your shoes, your collar button bursts off, you cut yourself shaving, the toast is burned, etc. You still hold in—then you stub your toe slightly. This pulls the trigger, and you explode. Little frustrations, if piled up, often cause big aggressions—sometimes murder.

How It Started

By Jean Newton

Calling It A "Caricature."

WE ARE familiar with the caricature as a portrait, a cartoon seen today most often in newspapers or other periodicals, which makes the subject ridiculous by its very likeness, that is by exaggeration of some characteristic which is easily recognizable.

Thus the man of round figure is made enormous, one with a comparatively large nose is depicted as mostly nose and little face, or protruding teeth are presented as more prominent than all the other features combined. This is burlesque of a graphic nature. The subject is made grotesque by the distortion of one element in his make-up.

Literally, a "caricature" is an "overloading." The word comes from the Italian, "caricatura," from "caricare," which means to load a car—from the Latin "carus," car or wagon. When a cart is overloaded it is off balance, and in this sense we can understand the term's application to exaggeration of one feature in the human design which throws that off balance.

This would seem to be enough to explain the word, aside from the fact that, in former times, effigies of this kind were sometimes carried on a cart, as part of a festival such as Guy Fawkes day in England. Here is an interesting word that can stand on its own etymologically.

My Day

By Eleanor Roosevelt

I HAVE been reading "Tito" by Vladimir Dedijer, somewhat belatedly since I have had it since January but only now have I found some time to look at it.

It is a delightfully written book and even after only the first few pages you find yourself putting it down reluctantly. The author is frank. He tells you at the beginning that he loves his country and he loves Tito, so you know what to expect. He tells Tito's story as Tito apparently told it to his comrades in moments of rest and relaxation even though the author has since then must have secured an almost hopeless one.

Through Tito's story you get an understanding of his development as a leader and of the development of Yugoslavia as a country. The pattern of communism grew out of the misery of the people and the fact that what communism promised seemed to be the only hope to them for a better life.

I HAVE NOT YET reached the last part of the book, which I am sure is the most interesting part and which tells of the break between Yugoslavia and the Soviet Union. Nevertheless, since I have been so long in finding time to read this book, I will tell my readers that they will find it most interesting reading, absorbing and revealing.

There is much to be learned from "Tito" which should interest not only the United States but also the development of democratic government. Tito is not only a man who wants to understand why people become Communists in many parts of the world. And that is something we need to understand if we are to have a day or two ago in citizens of the United States turn Communist? Some, but not all, of the answers can be found in this book.

We need to remember that democracy is not a strong only as long as it meets the needs of the people. When the people have hope and they see themselves marching forward to a better and better life, then democracy is secure.

THE AMERICAN ASSOCIATION OF THE UNITED NATIONS is sponsoring a conference here, with delegations from 112 organizations in attendance.

This has been a very satisfactory attendance since this represents a cross-section of American people who are really interested in international affairs, in bringing about world unity, in strengthening the U.N. and in using this organization to the limit of its capacity for improving understanding and good will throughout the world.

It is good for like-minded people to get together occasionally. It fills them with new strength and inspiration. Here in Washington they can see and hear the new administration leaders and members of the Congress, and they can gain a better understanding of what the nation's leaders are striving to achieve.

I think it is important, however, that we realize that as essential as a conference such as this one is, the work that grows out of it must be largely done with the people that are not of like mind.

I have traveled considerably since January in a small area of our country. And I am convinced that the majority of our people believe in the U.N. and have hope for the success of its objectives in the future. But there is a powerful and vocal minority that preaches defeat and despair, isolationism and selfishness, and it is that minority with which the work of the A.A.U.N. must be considered.

Moslems and the West

By Fulton J. Sheen

WESTERN democracies think of the West as the world of states and nations and governments, thus forgetting that there are great international movements that have little or no relation to politics.

Two of these supra-national forces are Communism and Moslemism, different though they be in their philosophy.

Two effects flow from the forgetfulness of these world movements.

One is the tendency of democracies to treat the Korean War as distinct from Russia, or to regard China as if it were an entity independent of Russia.

The other effect is to treat Moslemism as something peculiar to certain states, like Pakistan, Egypt, Iran, Iraq, etc., while forgetting that Moslemism is in overflows all political boundaries, races and colors and has a deeply mystifying spirit based on the Koran.

THE MOSLEMS, who number over 375,000,000, constitute the balance of power between the West and Russia. They are distinct from the West and from Russia; the Moslems being a theocracy in the strict sense of the term.

Moslemism differs from Christianity inasmuch as Our Divine Lord said: "My Kingdom is not of this world." The Saviour intended that we should be in the world, but not of it. Moslemism does not make this distinction. It is the Kingdom of this world. The Moslem religion is to the believer the way, to eat, to make love, to entertain, and to govern the earth.

THE WESTERN democracies have not seen the importance of the Moslems as a supra-national movement, but the Bolsheviks have. The latter are now launching a double campaign to win the followers of the Koran as worshippers of Lenin. The first technique Russia is using with the Moslems is to persecute the Jews. Their persecution is based on the idea that the Western World is favorable to the Jews and therefore anti-Arab. The Bolsheviks are now out to convince the Moslems that they are their true friends because they are the enemies of the Jews. Out-Hitlering Hitler, they swing from Czechoslovakian galleons the bodies of Jews, after prolonging the trial used for nefarious ends of propaganda. Only those whose mastermind is Satan could ever dream of winning friends and influencing people by training them into cadavers.

The second technique of the Bolsheviks to win the Moslems is to distinguish in their propaganda between the Moslem belief in God and his love of Mohammed. By not raising the question of atheism and by pleading the love of Mohammed, Russia has prepared for those tyrannies and betrayals which are spontaneously generated within the corruption of atheism.

IT REHOODES the Western world to take cognizance of the Moslems and their power for good in the future of the world. The Moslems in their turn have more to gain from the democracies, who believe in God-given liberties, than from Communism, which identifies freedom with the state.

Label Foods
It will be easier to keep a good inventory of foods in your freezer if you label the food properly. Packages of meats should be marked with the kind of cut, number of pieces and date of packaging. Always remember to date all packages.
